IRISH END FIGHT ON TREATY

TERMS ARE ACCEPTED IN DUBLIN SESSION

Constitution of Free State to Be Campaign Issue at General Election

Belfast, Feb. 22 (By the Associated Press).—Several persons were wounded today in a fresh outbreak of firing on the East Side, said to have resulted from a vendetta against saloon keepers of that section having Sinn Fein sympathies. Military guards were stationed at all the saloons in the York street district.

By International News Service.

Dublin, Feb. 22.—The fight over the Anglo-Irish treaty, which threatened to split the Sinn Fein wide open, has been adjusted and the following terms of compromise were announced today:

1—There will be no general election in Ireland before May.

2—The constitution of the Free State shall be a campaign issue.

3—The Dail Eireann (Sinn Fein Parliament) shall meet regularly.

The announcement was made by Eamon de Valera, following a conference with Michael Collins, minister of finance in the provisional government.

The Ard Fheis, or convention of the Sinn Fein, adjourned this afternoon for three months. Both Collins and de Valera emphasized the prediction that their agreement will lead to final peace in Ireland.

DUAL LIFE OF WIFE IS REVEALED

Divorced by Note From Husband, She Lives With Another for Ten Years

By HAROLD B. HALL.

The amazing story of how Mrs. Maude Antcliffe, legal wife of Elmer R. Antcliffe of Waltham, separated from her husband ten years ago and has lived since then as the "wife" of Parker C. Mosher of Maple street, Hyde Park, and has borne Mosher a beautiful daughter was revealed today to a Boston American reporter.

The story of the double life of Mrs. Antcliffe came to light as the result of an unsuccessful attempt by Antcliffe to marry eighteen-year-old Helen Marie Boates of Waltham on Monday last.

The attempted wedding was called off when a police inspector faced Antcliffe and his bride-to-be and disclosed the fact that Antcliffe had a wife living, and from whom he was not divorced. Antcliffe was sentenced to thirty days in the House of Correction for making a false statement in his application for a marriage license.

With a frankness that was astonishing, Mrs. Antcliffe, known in Hyde Park church circles as "Mrs. Parker C. Mosher," told the writer the story of her marriage to Antcliffe, of their agreement to part and of her life with Mosher for several years—years during which the woman has been high in church circles and has been elected president of the Ladies' Auxiliary, Loyal Order of Scottish Clans, at Hyde Park.

Mrs. Antcliffe declared that while she has lived with Mosher as his wife although not legally married, she feels that she has done no wrong—that "in the eyes of God" she is justified even to bearing Mosher a child.

"The whole trouble started by my marrying Antcliffe at all," declared Mrs. Antcliffe. "That was my first great mistake. I never should have married him. We were not intended for mates, but I discovered it too late. Mr. Mosher and I were the ideal mates, and I discovered that after I had been married to Antcliffe nearly two years. My life since then has been governed by that love for Parker (Mosher) which is all consuming.

WED TO SAVE ANTCLIFFE.

"The second great mistake that I made—the one that I fear will now spell ruin for me is not procuring a legal separation from my husband and then legally marrying Mr. Mosher. When I left Antcliffe he gave me a release. It was legal as far as I knew and he said it was. But I feared later that it was not and so never married.

"It was on July 16, 1910, that I married Antcliffe, she continued, and had been in the United States about two years at that time, and knew little of the ways of this country. I was born in Milton, Nova Scotia, and had come down from there.

"Antcliffe professed great love for me and pursued me and hounded me almost to death. Finally he declared passionately to me that unless I consented to marry him he would commit suicide by jumping onto the railroad tracks in front of a moving train. To save his life I married him.

"We had not been married two hours before we both realized that

MACHINE GUNS SENT TO MILLS

Unit Ordered to Pawtucket Following Reports of Unrest Among Strikers

Providence, Feb. 22.—A machine gun unit of thirty men was ordered to Pawtucket today for strike duty. The order follows reports from the military, already in Pawtucket, of restlessness in the ranks of the strikers.

At Pawtucket today the officials of the United Textile Workers of America let it be known that they were investigating all of the incidents connected with the shooting during the riot at the Jenckes Mills yesterday.

Friends of Jose D'Assuncao of Central Falls, who was shot dead, said today he was a grocer's clerk and was out making deliveries when he was shot down.

Prominent citizens of Portuguese descent today appealed to Portuguese Consul Fernanda Abecassis at Boston for an investigation into the shooting of D'Assuncao, who they claim was an innocent bystander. Consul Abecassis directed the vice-consul at Providence to look into the matter and report to the Boston consulate.

If it is found D'Assuncao was innocent of participation in the rioting, it is probable the Portuguese Minister at Washington will present a claim for indemnity to D'Assuncao's family.

OFFERS ULTIMATUM.

Thomas Harrop, chairman of the Pawtuxet Valley textile strikers' committee, today presented an ultimatum to Governor San Souci's recently appointed strike commission in session at the State House.

He gave to the commission what he claimed to be documentary evidence that certain mills in the Pawtuxet region were making at least 40 per cent. profit on their output.

If the commission did not subpoena the mill owners to answer his allegation, he said, the strikers would no longer deal with the commission. He accused the commission of not bringing pressure on the manufacturers to make them appear, state their case and submit to cross-examination.

Chairman Harrop presented to the commission evidence that sheeting, costing the mills eleven cents to make, including all overhead expenses, sells for 17½ cents from the mills.

Representatives of the manufacturers, strikers and members of the State Board of Conciliation and Arbitration attended the conference. It was understood the main question considered was whether or not to refer the dispute to arbitration. Both sides have been reluctant to give in.

With martial law virtually in effect in the strike area, striking mill workers have centred their efforts on a petition to the General Assembly to

Walter wandered all the way from Charlestown to do his bit to honor the "Father of His Country."

Governor Channing H. Cox and Mrs. Cox stood for two and a half hours in the Hall of Flags, State House, today while thousands of men, women and children poured through the apartment, pausing to shake the Governor's hand at the annual Washington's Birthday reception.

An outstanding incident was the presentation by Master C. N. Ellsworth Howard, four-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Howard of No. 124 Warren street, Brighton, of a handsome silken American flag to the Governor.

The boy wore four medals won by his crippled uncle, Nelson Belle-Isle, while coxswain on Admiral Sebley's flagship Brooklyn during the Spanish-American War.

The formal reception was opened by a concert given by the band of the First Coast Defence Command.

State Adjutant-General Jesse F. Stevens and members of his staff, headed by Major William F. Blanchard, were present at the reception.

Special appointments had been made with various organizations which had signified intention of sending delegations to the reception.

The first of these organizations was the Grand Army of the Republic.

The Civil War veterans were followed by the Sons of Veterans, Daughters of Veterans, Massachusetts Society of the Cincinnati, United Spanish War Veterans, American Legion, Sons of the American Revolution and Daughters of the American Revolution, army and navy officers, National Guard officers, British Naval and Military Veterans, Charitable Irish Society and other organizations, including the delegation from the Boston Police force, Massachusetts Society of Colonial Dames, Masonic Knights of Columbus and Canadian Club.

CONSIDER FUND FOR BONUS

Method of Raising Money for Soldiers to Be Decided on Shortly

By International News Service.

Washington, Feb. 22.—Sales tax to pay the soldiers' bonus was being framed today by the tax division of the Republican members of the House Ways and Means Committee.

Two general plans for the tax were under consideration. They were:

2—A general sales tax, with specified exemptions, raising $320,000,000 a year.

The first plan was advocated by Secretary of the Treasury Mellon and tax experts of the Treasury Department as most feasible because collections could be made easier and at less expense. The tax would vary from 3 to 6 per cent.

The second plan provides for a straight manufacturers' sales tax of 1 per cent., with a list of exemptions.

Both plans would put the tax on producers or wholesalers, neither plan contemplating a tax on retail sales or a turnover sales tax. The Ways and Means Committee's tax framers hope their work will be completed by the end of the week, when they will make a report to the full committee.

DETAILS OF SALES TAX PLAN FO BONUS TO BE READY IN FEW DAYS

ing the sales tax revenue plan for the bonus are Representative Fordney, Michigan; Macharach, New Jersey; Frear, Wisconsin; Treadway, Massachusetts; Copley, Illinois; Timberlake, Colorado; Watson, Pennsylvania, and Chandler, Oklahoma.

Some of these Congressmen do not approve of the sales tax, but they are going ahead with the work of framing a schedule for the bonus bill, explaining that it is the only plan left open to them by President Harding to provide funds for the bonus.

Representative Towner, Republican, Iowa, filed with the tax framers a protest against adoption of any form of the sales tax similar to the Canadian sales tax. He gave figures showing how the tax had advanced the price of sugar. This protest was signed by twenty-three Congressmen, all Republicans.

SENDS AN ANSWER.

Representative York, Republican, New York, sent the tax framers an answering statement asserting that sugar was exempted from the sales tax under the Canadian sales tax law, and demanding cessation of attacks on this form of taxation.

Secretary Mellon opposed indefinite authorization to use bonds or short term certificates to make deficiency bonus payments.

Reliance on use of interest or principal on foreign loans was discouraged by Secretary Mellon, but there remains a lingering hope by many members of Congress that in the end this will be the source from which bonus funds are drawn.

BROKEN GLASS FATAL TO WALTHAM WOMAN

JUDGE HARRIS FAVORS SALES TAX FOR BONUS

Councillor W. J. Foley Demands Congress Pass Adjusted Compensation Bill

William J. Foley, member of the Governor's Council and prominent Boston attorney, and Judge Robert O. Harris, United States District Attorney of Boston, were among those who today endorsed the campaign of the Boston American and other Hearst papers for the soldiers' bonus and the sales tax.

A steadily increasing number of prominent attorneys, bankers, politicians and business men are joining in the demand that Congress at once pass the adjusted compensation bill and provide for its payment by a tax on sales. The sales tax is endorsed by experts who have closely studied the present complex situation.

The passage of the adjusted compensation bill is generally regarded as inevitable. Present indications point to a landslide of public sentiment for the bill in New England.

"We have failed long enough in our duty toward the men who fought so courageously and unselfishly for us," declared Councillor Foley. "No argument that the country is too poor to pay the bonus is tenable.

GOVERNMENT OWES BONUS.

"The government was ready to come to the rescue of the railroads with large sums of money. It repaid many Industrial concerns for losses sustained through the breaking of contracts. Is it possible that the men who sacrificed opportunity, position and often health represent a less worthy object for reimbursement?

"The money which these men should receive ought not to be regarded as a 'bonus.' Neither should it be regarded as a form of national philanthropy. Compared with the large sums earned in security and comfort by the millions of men who elected to stay out of the army, the pay of the soldier, suffering almost superhuman odor and horror, was miserably inadequate.

"The purpose of the adjusted compensation bill, as I see it, is to make up in some measure the miserly pay that these brave lads received. The government owes it to them as much as it owed the men who worked in the shipyards their weekly salary.

FAVORS SALES TAX.

"I think that a sales tax is the only practical way in which to raise the money for the adjusted compensation. I do not favor a bond issue nor any enlargement of the present system of taxation."

United States District Attorney Harris said:

"There is no better way in my estimation to pay the bonus than the sales tax. It is equitable, efficient, simple, and will be adequate to raise the necessary amount.

"Under the present system of taxation, the country is carrying a load as heavy as it can. Industry is languishing and the present hard times are in a large measure probably due to this cause.

"A sales tax will relieve the situation. The large amount of money that is spent annually figuring up and checking the complex taxes will be saved in a large measure. The price of commodities to the consumer will not rise under a sales tax, as the consumer is paying the tax indirectly under the present system.

"The practicability of the sales tax has been proved by its successful operation in Canada."

A. Piatt Andrew Is Out for War Bonus

Congressman A. Piatt Andrew, speaking before members of the Wachusett Club in Haverhill, added his name to the list of those who are seeking a reward for the ex-service man when he came out uncompromisingly in favor of the proposed soldier bonus bill.

Congressman Andrew declared that he believed the bonus could be paid without the need of raising money by additional taxation, pointing out that if the result of the Arms Conference is to come up to expectations, the government will save fully $200,000,000 yearly on its armament bills.

"If all veterans should choose cash compensation under the provisions of the bill, which is now pending, said the Congressman, the cost at the end of twenty years would be a little over $5,000,000,000. These two figures, he continued, represent the maximum and minimum possible costs of the bonus.

Charges Worcester Man Slandered Veterans

Worcester, Feb. 22.—Ralph E. Murphy, adjutant of Worcester Post, American Legion, has filed a complaint with Mayor Peter F. Sullivan against Gerhard Becker, city almoner, charging that Becker remarked to him: "Some men were fools to go into the service."

Murphey took exception to this statement, declaring that Becker should be last one to make it in view of the fact that his war record was confined to the sale of Liberty bonds.

"I said that some men were fools to go into the war and leave families behind them to run the chance of being pauperized," said Becker.

"No man was a fool to go into the service," retorted Murphey, "and mark my words if you do not retract that statement you will regret it."

Murphey continued: "Where were you when the country needed men?"

$250,000 DAMAGE IN BROWNSVILLE, PA., FIRE

Brownsville, Pa., Feb. 22.—A fire starting today in the ruins of Harry Levy's department store threatened the business section here. Several stores had been destroyed. The damage is estimated at between $250,000 and $300,000. One fireman was overcome by smoke. The Levy store was burned last night.

PETITION TO CONGRESS

For Action on Soldiers' Bonus With Sales Tax to Pay It

WE respectfully petition Congress to pass the soldiers' bonus act without further delay and also to levy a sales tax to obtain the money to pay the bonus, for the following reasons:

FIRST: Public opinion throughout the United States is undoubtedly in favor of the soldiers' bonus as shown by the decisive majority in every State in which a popular referendum has been taken: In Maine by 3 to 1; New Jersey by 3½ to 1; New York nearly 2 to 1; Rhode Island 6 to 1; Wisconsin 3 to 1; Oregon 2 to 1; Washington 2½ to 1, and so on.

SECOND: We believe that Congress if permitted to vote on the soldiers' bonus bill will favor it with even greater unanimity, regardless of party, than the popular majority by which the people in twenty-two States have already approved it; we believe that the soldiers' bonus cannot and ought not to be defeated and that the longer it is postponed, the greater the injustice.

THIRD: We believe the new tax scheme proposed by the Ways and Means Committee is only a little less objectionable than Secretary Mellon's proposal for three cent postage and for a new three-cents-a-gallon tax on gasoline. Proponents of such taxes oppose any soldiers' bonus whatever and hope by linking it with such new destructive and unpopular taxes to kill the proposition altogether.

FOURTH: If the soldiers' bonus is not only right, but inevitable, and if the United States is not to lag behind England, France, Italy, Canada and Australia, which have already paid liberal soldiers' bonuses, then our payment is already long overdue, not as a debt (for our debt to the soldiers can never be paid), but as a just tribute to the valor and the sacrifice of the men who won the war.

FIFTH: The only question that remains is: By what system of taxation shall the money be raised? Not by bond issues, because it is against the traditional policy of the United States to increase debt in time of peace. Not by any irritating, unreasonable or destructive tax on individuals, business or industry, because we already have too many such taxes. A small general sales tax will raise more than enough to pay the soldiers' bonus. It will bear heavily on no one. If the experience of Canada and our own Philippine Islands, where the sales tax is in operation, is repeated, the system will meet with such favor that it will become one of the approved methods of raising necessary revenue after the soldiers' bonus has been paid.

WIFE FREED BY HUSBAND BARES STORY OF LIFE

we had done an unwise thing. He told me before we got back to the house that he had made a mistake and that he then knew we were not intended for each other. I believe the man was crazy.

LOVED MOSHER ON SIGHT.

"We went to live with his mother in Waltham. We were poor. We were unhappy. Our life was a perfect hell. Then came Mr. Mosher. He came down from Nova Scotia with some friends of mine and the moment that I saw him I knew that he was the man I should live with.

"He looked at me and knew that I was the woman intended for him. I told him, 'Parker, you and I were born for each other. I will go through Hell for you.' And now I guess I shall have to do it, for the publicity of this thing will drive me out of the church. It will drive me out of this town, it will kill me. Oh, God! Why did I ever do it?"

"Well, Parker and I finally decided that we would get married. We went to my husband and told him about it. We told him of our great love. We told him that we were born for each other. He agreed and gave me a written release which he said was legal.

"That was on the night of December 5, 1917. He sat down in his mother's home and wrote that release and signed it while Parker and I waited. He gave it to me, kissed me good-bye, shook Parker's hand and after I had kissed his mother, I took my things and walked out of the house with Parker. Hell for you? Oh, no! I guess I shall have to do it, for the publicity of this thing will drive me out of the church, it will drive me out of this town, it will kill me. Oh, God! Why did I ever do it?"

SHOWS MARRIAGE 'RELEASE.'

Waltham, Mass., Dec. 5, 1917.

To who it may concern, on and after this date, December 5, 1917, my wife, Mrs. Elmer R. Antcliffe, has my consent to marry whoever she may please. Also my consent to the custody of our child, Ruth Antcliffe.

(Signed) ELMER R. ANTCLIFFE.

(Witness) Lottie M. Antcliffe.

"The next day I went home to the house and took away my little two-year-old baby, Ruth. My husband was cheerful about our going and carried the baby to the street car for me when we left. Only once since then have I seen my husband. I thought he was dead until I read the story about his attempted wedding in Waltham.

"When Parker and I left the Waltham home of Antcliffe we went to live at No. 44 Tremont street, Boston. There we lived for about two years and we both tasted of real happiness for the first time. But there was the fact that we were not married; that disturbed me.

RIGHT "IN GOD'S EYES."

"I thought at first that the release that Antcliffe gave me was legal. Then I began to doubt it and finally we decided that we could not legally be married. So we kept on as we were. In the eyes of God, I was Parker's wife, and I cared for nothing else.

"We moved to Mattapan where we took an apartment. There our daughter, Gladys, was born. We could not turn back then. We had to keep up our pretence of being married for the sake of our Gladys and the little daughter that I had borne Antcliffe. Parker cared for Ruth as though she were his own, and everybody thought that both of the girls were ours.

"It was while we were living in Mattapan, on Wood avenue, that Antcliffe paid us his one and only visit. He came out one day and spent the day and evening with Parker and me and the children. That night he stayed late and played cards with us. He did not seem angry at Parker for taking me away from him. He was jolly and we had a fine time that day. He kissed me good-bye and shook hands with Parker like an old friend and that night when he departed.

"It was the last time I saw him. I thought he had gone out of our lives forever. In fact I heard that he was dead, and for a long time have thought he was. Oh! the shock when I read the Boston American and saw that he was not. I felt then that my name would be dragged into this.

FEARS FOR CHILDREN.

"Despite the fact that Parker and I have never gone through a legal marriage ceremony he have been as happy as it is possible for two persons to be. We have both been faithful to each other and not a soul in the world ever dreamed that we were not legal man and wife.

"Last October we bought this place and moved here. I am high in the church now and am well thought of and respected as this town. What shall I ever do now? If it were not for the two children I know that I would end it all. I can't bear to face it.

"But in my heart I feel that I have done no wrong by living with Parker and bearing him a child. In the eyes of God, I know that I am right. I know that I would have done wrong to have stayed with Antcliffe and gone on through life as we were living. It would have been wrong to have lived with him. It is right that I should live with Parker.

"But what will the world say? The world does not look at things in that way. I know that I have done right; the world will think I did wrong. I am terribly sorry now that I did not go through and get a divorce and legally marry Parker. I shall do that now. I shall probably have to move from here because of the children, but I shall not give up Parker. I shall have him for my legal husband yet. We were born for each other."

A beautiful, well ordered home is that in which Mrs. Antcliffe and Mosher are living in, Hyde Park. It is tastefully and well furnished. A model housekeeper is Mrs. Antcliffe. She loves her home and her two children.

HAVE BEEN THRIFTY.

Since she moved to Hyde Park she has moved rapidly up the social ladder. She is the founder of the auxiliary of which she is president. She is also a member of the Congregational Church and is one of its most active workers.

Mosher is employed at the Readville shops of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad. There he has a good paying position as assistant foreman. Both he and Mrs. Antcliffe are thrifty and from the savings of the past ten years he has saved and purchased the home in which they are now living. He is forty years old, and Mrs. Antcliffe is thirty-five.

Ruth, the daughter of Mrs. Antcliffe and her legal husband, is a pretty little girl of twelve years. Gladys, the daughter born to Mrs. Antcliffe and Mosher, is eight years old.

Attleboro, Feb. 22.—Thomas Upton, ninety years old, who lived alone in a secluded part near the Rehoboth line was found dead in bed by Louis F. Barry, a neighbor. Upton was last seen February 5, and Barry, fearing for his safety, broke in the door. Medical Examiner Charles S. Holden said that Upton had been dead at least two weeks, death being the result of heart trouble and exposure. There were no fires in the house. Upton's only relative is a son whose address is unknown.

PRISONER WILL 'REVEAL' TAYLOR MURDERER

Convicted Drug Addict and Forger Held by Police at Detroit

Detroit, Feb. 22.—Declaring he was in Los Angeles the night of the William Desmond Taylor murder and that he would disclose the identity of Taylor's slayer, Harry N. Fields, drug addict and convicted forger, today told Chief Fox his detailed movements the week of the crime. Fields was arrested for the Detroit police in Buffalo on February 6. He was remanded to jail for sentence.

Last night Fields told Emory Brooks turnkey, he knew who killed Taylor. Impressed gy the fact Fields was a drug addict and confessed member of a "dope ring" the turnkey notified Sheriff Coffin, who wired to Los Angeles. California authorities wired back a list of test questions which they said would prove or disprove Fields' claim. To these questions, Fields today replied in a statement to Chief Fox. No answer has been received since they were telegraphed to Los Angeles.

KNOWN TO POLICE.

Substantiation of Fields' claim that he knew the slayer of Taylor was seen in Fields' criminal record furnished by Detroit police. It indicates Fields is known to police of California and that he has been identified with drug peddlers for at least two years.

Fields' first recorded conviction was in King's County, Washington, September 30, 1916 when he was sentenced to six months to twenty years in Walla-Walla Penitentiar. April 22, 1918, he was sentenced to six months for vagrancy in Santa Monica, California.

The following year he was arrested here in possession of 100 grains of morphine and turned over to the Department of Justice, the record shows. Subsequent to his arrest on the drug charge here he was sentenced to twenty years in New Westminster prison, British Columbia, for forgery, but was later pardoned.

ADMITS DRUG TRAFFIC.

Chief Fox declared the information furnished by Fields would undoubtedly be invaluable to the coast authorities if it proved true. He expressed doubt of Fields' story, however, basing his hesitation on the fact Fields is apparently suffering from long continued use of drugs.

This fact, however, is taken by other officials to confirm the man's tale. The Taylor case has been interwoven throughout the operations of drug peddlers they pointed out, and the fact that Fields admits drug traffic in Los Angeles is regarded as partial proof of his story.

Names of three dope peddlers alleged to be implicated in the plot to kill Taylor were given police this afternoon by Fields. He declared he and the three men, members of the ring, which furnished the movie colony with drugs, fled Hollywood on the night of the crime. The record one of the three would be directly connected with the killing. The names were immediately wired to Los Angeles.

Identify Suspect at Concord, N. C.

Richmond, Vt., Feb. 22.—Captain of Detectives Wright this morning wired the chief of police of Concord, N. C., that Harvey H. Adams, arrested there as a suspect in the Wilmer Desmond Taylor tragedy, is a Richmond man, and asked that he be released. Mrs. Adams lives at No. 302 East Ninth street, South Richmond.

3 ARMED BANDITS ROB PROVIDENCE MILK MAN

Providence, Feb. 22.—Edward Perry, Hillsgrove, was held up and robbed of $35 in the Lincoln Woods, near his home, by three men, who covered him with revolvers. Perry was driving a milk wagon when the men leaped suddenly from the bushes. After accomplishing the robbery they sped off through the woods in the direction of the railroad tracks. Perry was unable to furnish the police with much of a description of the men.

ELEVATOR RUDDER FAULTY

By International News Service.

Washington, Feb. 22.—A broken cable was primarily responsible for the fatal crash of the dirigible Roma with a loss of thirty-four lives, according to a preliminary investigation by Major-General Mason M. Patrick, chief of air service.

General Patrick telegraphed the War Department today:

"Have ordered thorough investigation to determine cause of Roma disaster. Information already gathered indicates that cable to elevator rudder broke. Ship nosed down. Struck live wire carrying high tension electric current and this started fire. There was no explosion and no fire until after those wires were hit and broken.

Gas Bag of Roma Rotten, Say Army Men

Newport News, Va., Feb. 22. — Reports that the bag of the dirigible Roma, the disaster to which resulted in the death of thirty-four American airmen, was rotten, will be probed by an army board of inquiry. Both officers and men today declined to comment on the report.

Belief was expressed today by those who saw the Roma on her flight that one of the after compartments gave away, forcing the rudder out of angulment.

Mechanics who worked on the Roma when she was first brought to Langley Field are indirectly quoted as saying the bag was rotten.

Officers and enlisted men, point out that the Roma was given several tests by experts before she was sent up. They further declare that had the bag been rotten or construction faulty trouble almost certainly would have developed on the trial flight to Washington some time ago at which time the Roma raced back to Langley Field ahead of one of the worst storms of the year.

England Mourns With U. S., London Times Says

(Special Cable Dispatch.)

London, Feb. 22.—The Times is the only paper in London to comment editorially on the terrible disaster to the dirigible Roma. It says in part:

"A cry of deep and heartfelt sympathy will go out this morning from the people of Great Britain to the citizens of the United States.

"England feels for America today as she did when her own sons were numbered among those killed in the disastrous end of the R-38."

PILOT BLAMES CONTROLS FOR DISASTER

Roma Refused to Respond at 600 Feet, Says Burt, One of Survivors

By International News Service.

Hampton Roads, Va.—Lieutenant Byron G. Burt, elevating pilot on the Roma and the only active flight control officer to survive the disaster, today blamed the crash on the failure of control instruments to operate. He said the ship refused to respond to the elevating controls while 600 feet in air and dove head first into the ground at an angle of 45 degrees.

"I noticed soon after we left Langley Field that the ship was having trouble in keeping her head up," Burt said today. "I tried the controls repeatedly, but she maneuvered very badly. While we were near supply base, the elevators failed entirely to respond to the controls. I called attention to this unusual predicament and then noticed that the ship was falling by the head.

"I couldn't understand it. I threw the control levers far over, and ordinarily the Roma should have nosed up in the air, but she continued to settle. We went down and as we neared the earth the men realized that we were going to crash and they became panic-stricken.

"A few, I think, leaped over the side —one dove with a parachute. I heard later that it failed to open.

REMAINED AT CONTROLS.

"I remained at the controls, still trying to get her nose up, but as we neared the ground the envelope struck overhead electric wires parallelling the road into camp. The next instant we struck, nose first.

"The bag seemed to roll over as she settled on the ground. I was thrown into a ditch that ran near the field. That instant a terrible explosion followed by sweeping gusts of flames swept the ship. I owe my life to the fact that I fell in a ditch, which sheltered me from the explosion. The ship was blazing all over as I crawled along the ditch out from under the wreckage. I think that the first blast of flame killed every man caught beneath the envelope of the cabins."

Investigations into the crash are being conducted by Major-General Patrick, chief of the Army Air Service, who came from Washington by airplane by Lieutenant-Colonel A. Lain G. Fisher, acting commandant at the flying field, who ordered the Roma "up" on its last flight, and by Major E. L. Kennedy, summary court officer.

Major Kennedy announced he would swear in a jury and hold an inquest over the bodies.

Captain Walter G. Reid, who stood by the ship to the last and did all he could to help the others aboard, came out of the inferno with only a few scars on his ears and hand.

COMMANDER WAS HERO.

One of the most heroic figures in the horrible disaster was Captain Dale Mabry, commandant of the Roma and principal pilot. He stuck to his post to the end. His charred hands held the control wheel in a death-clutch when the body was found by rescuers. His body was charred almost beyond recognition.

Captain Mabry, survivors say, made a valiant fight in an endeavor to save the craft. He first attempted to get the Roma to a higher altitude after the craft caught fire. This was done to give Lieutenant Burt a chance to use their safety parachutes.

London Likens Loss of Roma to R-38 Tragedy

London, Feb. 22 (By the Associated Press).—News of the destruction of the United States army dirigible Roma is the feature in London morning newspapers.

Similarity of the details with those of the destruction of the R-38 on her last Summer is widely remarked. The Times says that, while in the Hall tragedy the people of the United States and Great Britain joined in a common sorrow, "this time the blow has fallen on America alone, but England feels with her and for her today" no less than she did when her own sons were numbered among the dead."

Regarding investigation of the R-38 disaster, it is understood the question of publication of the Air Ministry's report depends upon the Admiralty, to whom it must be referred. The report has also been communicated to the United States government, as the latter's representatives were associated in the investigation.

Mitchell Thought Roma Was "Safest Airship."

By International News Service.

Berlin, Feb. 22.—Brigadier-General William Mitchell, assistant chief of the American air service, who has just arrived in Berlin, declared today that he considered the American dirigible Roma "the safest ship that ever took the air."

"We had no fears for the Roma," said he.

"The crew of the dirigible was the best possible."

The officer said he could say no more until he received further details which he anxiously awaited.

Boston Boys Served With Commander Mabry

He was a native of Miami, Fla., where his father is a judge. After leaving the 10th Company he enlisted in the French Balloon School. After a course in France he came to Washington and again entered the service of the United States.

DODGES POLICE BULLETS; LEAPS OUT WINDOW

Waltham Housebreaker Fugitive Later Found in Collapse

Mark Kelley, sixteen years old, of School street, Waltham, leaped through a heavy plate glass window of the old Dr. Moses mansion Worcester lane, Waltham, today, with the bullets from the guns of two policemen singing past his ears, and raced nearly a mile and a half through the snow and dark, despite loss of blood from a number of gashes inflicted by broken glass.

He was captured, exhausted, on Lexington street. He will be arraigned for attempted larceny.

For some time reports have reached the Waltham police that thieves had been looting the famous old mansion in Worcester Lane.

Last night Patrolmen Whalen and Coen were sent to the house to guard it.

It was nearing dawn when a noise was heard at the front door and then the police saw three shadowy figures enter and move down the hall toward the rear.

Whalen turned on his flash light and commanded the intruders to throw up their hands. Two obeyed. The third leaped through a window, smashing the pane and carrying away a portion of the sash.

Coen fired two shots, which went wild. Then the policeman ran to the window and followed the fugitive out into the snow-covered street.

The slim form of the runner could be seen against a street light and Coen fired four more shots, but with out effect. When he lost the fugitive in the dark the officer ran to a phone and summoned aid.

The officers searched the district for the missing man and finally discovered Kelley, sunk in a heap in the snow on Lexington street.

In the meantime Whalen had stood guard over the other two intruders who later gave their names as Dewey Waddell, eighteen years old, of Main street, Waltham, and John Clifford, nineteen years old, of Gibbs court, both men admitted to bail in $500.

Eight military units, comprising six companies of coast artillery, an ambulance detachment and a machine gun company were on duty in the city.

Superintendent Ott said the weavers seemed nervous at the appearance of the troops, but promised to return to work tomorrow. There has been no strike at the mill, which employs 600 hands.

Convention, for three months was reached today among the political leaders in that body.

The agreement provides that no vote in the Dail Eireann shall require the resignation of the Provisional Government and that there shall be no election meanwhile. When the election is held a new constitution under the Anglo-Irish treaty, it is stipulated, shall be submitted to the country.

After Eamon De Valera and Arthur Griffith had answered several questions respecting the agreement, Ard Fheis, by a viva voce vote, approved the agreement and adjourned.

"The reaching of the agreement was announced to the Ard Fheis by Mr. De Valera, amidst a storm of cheers.

"The Irish Independent says the delegates from the country—in daily touch with the people and with the recollection of the many cases of disastrous consequences from former dissensions—showed true appreciation of the grave dangers involved in a split.

The Freeman's Journal says editorially: "The most significant feature of the proceedings was the determination of the documentarians to avoid contact with the Irish people as long as possible. They denounced the idea of an immediate appeal to the nation."

'DAISY DRIVE' IS ENDORSED BY COX

Governor Cox and Mayor Curley have expressed the hope that the State-wide "Daisy Drive" of the American Legion will be a big success. By the sale of tiny artificial daisies all over the State on Friday and Saturday of this week the Legion plans to raise a fund for the benefit of needy former service men.

Governor Cox said: "I know of no appeal more worthy than this appeal."

Mayor Curley said: "God speed the good work."

Not one of the hundreds of workers who will take part in the drive on those days but has volunteered his or her services, and the Legion officials declare that one hundred cents out of every dollar so raised will be used to alleviate the condition of the men and women who gave service during the World War and who are now out of work and in dire need.

In his statement the Governor says:

"On Friday and Saturday, February 24th and 25th, the Massachusetts State Branch of the American Legion is to make an effort to replenish the fund for needy veterans of the World War and their dependents—a fund which has been depleted by the wise and prudent expenditures of the Legion in a very patriotic and just effort to help the brave service men.

"I know of no appeal more worthy than this appeal. I know of no committee more entitled to the kindly consideration and assistance of their fellow citizens, especially veterans of the World War who in other days answered so promptly and efficiently the call of the Republic."

Mayor Curley, in a letter to Leo A. Spillane, department adjutant of the American Legion, said: "I sincerely trust that the Daisy Drive to be conducted by the Department of Massachusetts of the American Legion will be a genuine success. I know of nothing more deplorable or pathetic than the presence on our streets of men engaged in seeking employment when there are no positions vacant, and a large proportion of those men the ones through whose service and sacrifice free government was preserved in the world, if through a Daisy Drive, such as your organization proposes, sufficient funds can be secured to relieve their suffering and aid them in their hour of need, then I say "God speed the good work."

BREAK RECORD FOR HIGH-SPEED WEDDING

Proposed, Accepted and Married, All in Few Hours; Race to Northwest

Mr. and Mrs. Stephen W. Finn are speeding to the Canadian Northwest today, Mrs. Finn on a simon-pure honeymoon and Mr. Finn on a honeymoon and business trip.

At noon yesterday they had no thought of marriage.

The red tape and business which they concluded between the receipt of a telegram to Mr. Finn from his firm and their marriage at the rectory of St. Mark's Church, Allston, last night, included a proposal, an acceptance and marriage.

Mr. Finn, who is a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania, a Phi Keta Kappa man and the champion 175-pound wrestler of his class, is a Californian, thirty-one years old, and represents a Southern manufacturing concern in Boston. Yesterday he was ordered by telegram to proceed to Canada on an extended mission.

Mrs. Finn, nee Miss Hazel Corrinne Brisbin, is a native of Cleveland, Ohio. She is an inventor of an envelope sealing device and other office appliances, and, though considerably her husband's junior, has carved out a business career for herself.

Both strangers in Boston, their meeting was as uncommonplace as their hurried wedding. Mr. Finn lived at No. 718 Commonwealth avenue. Miss Brisbin lived at No. 71 St. Mary's street, Brookline, not far away.

"The lad with the bow and arrow got me the first shot," the groom said before leaving today.

He did some quiet detective work, identified Miss Brisbin and located her home, and then hunted up a mutual acquaintance who introduced them.

When he got the telegram he hurried to the place of business of Miss Brisbin, took her to lunch, proposed, was accepted, and then broke the news that the wedding must be at once or not for a long time.

"When I went to get out the license I ran up against the first delay snag," said Mr. Finn. "Judge Parmenter waived that formality, and then I was told that I would have to get out a license in Brookline. I went out there and found that the town clerk was gone for the day. I went to his house and waited until after 6 o'clock, when he came in."

After that he wound up his affairs, went to the home of Dr. C. W. Duffield, rector of St. Marks, and was married, bought railroad tickets and called it a day.

Mrs. C. S. Whiton, bursar of Wellesley College, and Mrs. R. I. Kellam, bursar of M. I. T., were the only witnesses to the wedding.

MRS. HOLT, AGED 94, BURIED IN KEARSARGE

The funeral of Mrs. Almira Holt (Seavey) Barnes, ninety-four years old, who died suddenly in her Winter home at 44 Marion road, Arlington, Saturday, was held in her home town, Kearsarge, N. H., at the residence of her son, Lester C. Barnes, who is postmaster of Kearsarge. The Rev. James McD. Hline, pastor of the Congregational Church, at North Conway, of which she was a member, officiated. Burial was in the family lot in the Kearsarge Cemetery. Mrs. Barnes was born in Kearsarge, on December 17, 1827, and she had spent most of her life in that town.

BEWARE COUNTERFEIT $10 AND $20 BILLS

John J. McGrath, head of the local secret service bureau, is warning storekeepers and bank tellers to examine carefully all $10 and $20 bills tendered them, in order to detect any counterfeits. Several have been called to his attention recently where bills of this denomination have been raised to $100 by the service men, a practiced much in the West. The pictures of the Hamilton counterfeit bills, appearing at the top in the phoney bills, mislead the average person in receiving the bill to be of the regular value.

ARGUES FOR RELIGION IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS

"People of these days are going to the devil and this is due to a large extent to the fact that they have not had the benefit of religious training," so declared Frank A. Bennett of Saugus, speaking before the Legislature committee on education in favor of a bill calling for an investigation by the Department of Education to determine the feasibility of teaching religion in the public schools. There was no opposition.

COX PICKING MAN TO SUCCEED PELLETIER

Having Two or Three in Mind, He Consults Allen on Their Availability

Governor Cox today said he has not decided upon the man to fill the position occupied by Joseph C. Pelletier. He admitted, he had two or three men in mind.

The Governor had a conference today with Attorney-General J. Weston Allen to obtain his views upon the matter.

"I desire to learn what he thinks of the two of three men I am considering for the place," said Governor Cox today. "I also expect to confer with other persons who expressed a desire to my secretary to talk with me relative to a successor to Mr. Pelletier. Judging from the names, I expect that some of them will press their own claims for the position. We still have several good lawyers left in Boston."

SPEAKS FOR ITSELF.

When asked if he desired to make any comment upon the removal of Mr. Pelletier the Governor said:

"I do not think it would be fitting for me to make any comment. The decision which was a unanimous one of the Supreme Court speaks for itself."

A flock of candidates have been mentioned for the place. Walter L. Collins, formerly president of Boston City Council; Attorney Michael T. Jeffcan, Judge Edward L. Logan of South Boston court, former Corporation Counsel John A. Sullivan, Penal Commissioner Thomas C. O'Brien and William Foley, a member of the Governor's Council, were prominently mentioned today.

Attorney William Flaherty of Barnstable Bar, who assisted Attorney General Allen as special assistant Attorney General in the preparation and the prosecution of the charges against District Attorney Nathan A. Tufts of Middlesex County and District Attorney Pelletier of Suffolk County would have been recommended for the berth, but remember the Attorney General not to name him, according to reliable information today.

FIELDING TO REMAIN.

It was reported on good authority today that Assistant District Attorney Henry P. Fielding would be requested by Attorney General Allen to remain permanently under the new district attorney. Assistant District Attorney Lyons has been retained to complete the case against Attorney General Allen for the alleged larceny of a small amount of coal in the case of an client.

Statement made by former Attorney General Herbert Parker, counsel for Attorney General Allen, Allen claims that indictment against him should be quashed, as he alleges that it was obtained by Pelletier through the course of undue influence before the grand jury.

PELLETIER RAPS COURT AS INSINCERE

Joseph C. Pelletier, declared unfit and removed from office of district attorney for Suffolk County by the Supreme Court, will appeal the decision before the people at the polls next November.

Mr. Pelletier makes this announcement in a long statement which points out that the Supreme Court has "usurped" the right of elected officials to appeal removal decisions.

The decision in the unjust, avers the ex-district attorney; evidence is omitted or misquoted and that ruling, he says, is believed. It is the outcome, he charges, of the scheme of Godfrey Cabot and the minions of the Watch and Ward Society, planned long before, but started in the Winter of 1917, and inspired by his robust and lusty "immoral methods."

Mr. Pelletier declares he is consolous only of the faithful performance of his duty and stresses his efforts to do so as a humanitarian rather than as an amicable prosecutor.

The statement is as follows:

"The Supreme Court has become the arbiter of our destinies as well as interpreter of the law.

"Under the old Pagan law, justice, so called, was arbitrary and the individual without rights. Even in England an accused man had no right of appeal except as matter of favor, it was left for the American Revolution to set up real freedom and to give men, as a matter of right, the advantage, of appeal.

"Such has been our practice until the present law, passed in 1856, was recently invoked and elected officers held for trial and removed without appeal on law or facts. The court itself has maintained, against objection, that the arbitrary, unusual in America can law is constitutional and must be administered by them.

PERVERTS GOVERNMENT.

"Jefferson, like Washington, in his wisdom, perceived that inevitably the courts would pervert from the true power which could not rightfully be theirs under a free government; that the germ of dissolution of popular government, lurked in the judiciary, which if stimulated by the temptation to exercise political power, would become 'an irresponsible body, working by gradual, & peaceful & legal, ruining a little today and a little tomorrow, and advancing with noiseless step, like a thief, until the whole of our jurisdiction until all shall be usurped.'

"By a court thus usurping the power of its own increased power, a law taking from the people their chosen officials, may be removed from office.

"The opinion comes forth in repeated words of censure and condemnation until the English language is wellnigh exhausted in vituperative. Hardly, I suggest, an opinion written in the cool, calm of judicial minds.

"Quoted, libertine and other kind, are quoted and believed and their character, worth and credibility are, apparently, 100 per cent. if useful against me. The remarkable breaking down and confusion of witnesses by Senator Reed was, apparently, time wasted, for the court holds their evidence as convincing.

"FREE SPEECH NO MORE."

"The court spends pages in demonstrating that Mackie is a convicted criminal and then finds me guilty for on his unsupported testimony and upon the same testimony which Justice John W. Goff of New York unhesitatingly rejected in his finding completely exonerating me.

"This present opinion finds, in effect, that the people who elected me, form any opinion they may have had I am and have been for years unfit to hold office.

"Free speech is no more. A stump speech of mine was one of the reasons for my removal. It was passe, so intended and so received by my audiences as the witnesses said. Senator Reed, in his argument, said of their political speech: 'To treat it seriously, is to make of it nothing so trivial.' The awful solemnity with which this joke has been invested is sufficient comment upon the frame of mind of the court toward me.

"Mr. Allen asked the court to try me on a speech in which I referred to the judges of the Supreme Court being members of the Union Club. They declined in words at present so to do. The Attorney General's injection into his argument of reference to the indictment of one of their colleagues and my 'reflections upon our judiciary' would easily account for the bitter and unjudicial nature of the entire opinion.

"The sincerity of the opinion may be measured by the fact that the same court which declined to give a formal hearing to the accusation that I had made a speech, calling attention to the relation of the court to the Union Club, allowed the Attorney General, without consent, to bring their prejudice by referring, to this matter in his argument.

"The efforts of the court to justify themselves is shown by their statement that the 'undue influences and unreasoning prejudices in the prosecution is without a shadow of basis. It is not supported by a shred of evidence.' The court that wrote those words for publication knew that under their ruling in the Tufts case no testimony to support such charges would be admitted.

"So the expected has happened; planned long before but started in the winter of 1917, the scheme of Godfrey Cabot and his minions stung by my rebuke for the immoral methods of the Watch and Ward Society has been completed.

"Applications to the Legislature for my investigation met with unanimous refusal; applications to the Supreme Judicial Court for my removal twice refused; engagement finally of the assistance of the highbrow group of the Bar Association headed by H. B. Wilson, paid $5,000 by the Association to manage the campaign and make use of the peeping-Tom method of dictagraph in my office; stealing of papers; fruitless search of my home and office to create the Hannewell Case; use of crook and criminal, detective, and drunk, to build up charges, all of which culminated in securing my removal from office.

INNOCENCE NOT PRESUMED.

"The office of District Attorney is now freed of the man who would not do their bidding, nor their perjured evidence and immoral methods; who dared to criticise them. They have taken the office, but they have not taken from me the confidence of the people which I deserve more than even the approval of the court.

"Forced into the trial of thirty-one cases, none of them recent, some six years old, with time only sufficient to prepare one ordinary case, listening in court to perjured testimony from the lips of witnesses who, as soon as Senator Reed said, 'could be called a "Rogues Gallery"; hearing innocent lawyers of integrity suddenly accused of wrong-doing for the single purpose of making competent further perjured testimony; receiving adverse decisions on all rulings proposed by a dozen lawyers assisted by State and city police without number—it was apparent that I was being tried without the presumption of innocence.

"Perhaps my twelve years in the Criminal Court when every means was taken by me as prosecutor to safeguard the rights of the accused and to protect reputations furnished me with a standard which the court in my case was not inclined to apply.

GRATEFUL TO FOLLOWERS.

"Conscious of the faithful performance of my duty, so often thanked by the people and further supported by the opinion of my distinguished counsel that no case had been made out against me, I presented no evidence, feeling that no court could possibly give credence to the palpable worthlessness of the testimony in my case.

"At this time I want to publicly thank Senator Reed and General Boyle for their very able defence and personal devotion to me and my cause; also Daniel M. Lyons, Frederick M. Rhoenas, William Minot Hurd and the many others who rendered such helpful and generous service during the trial.

"My heart's gratitude goes out also to that legion of men and women, many of them generally unknown to me, whose faith and confidence in me have remained unshaken, and whose prayers in my behalf have supported and helped me so wonderfully during these weeks of trial and suspense. God bless them all and grant them deliverance from similar ordeal!

"I have labored hard for twelve years in administering the great office of district attorney given me by the people. I have tried to serve them faithfully, humanely and wisely and to administer my office under full oath. I have loved my work. It was good that I could do, a privilege not attaching to any other public office.

SOUGHT TO SAVE REPENTERS.

"My first thought has always been to protect and safeguard the public—after that to save fathers, mothers, sons and daughters from an avenging law which so frequently destroys.

"Orphans of the law are too often left to the cruelty of the irresponsible rules and blind administration of the law. I have tried to save reputations, to salvage men and women and restore the wrongdoer by the quickest possible means to a normal way of thinking and acting, to a useful life of service in the community.

"My picture of justice has not been that of a blind pagan goddess with sword in one hand and scales in the other, but rather a wide-eyed, far-seeing, Christ-like figure with outstretched hands offering mercy, hope and consolation to all who have transgressed the law and are truly repentant.

"I hate the word punishment and would write it from the law books. Man's imposition of punishment has always been ineffectual and too often cruel. We should rather try to correct than to punish, leaving punishment here or hereafter, to a just and merciful Father who reads the human heart when we can only conjecture. In correction there is hope, there is helpfulness, there is consolation for the innocent dear ones; there is love and the reciprocal devotion, service and gratitude to the State.

URGES READING OF DECISION.

"I ask the people to read the decision with care and to observe it as that they can compare with the decision in the Godfery Cabot case, the Dr. Wentz case, the Dr. Pierce Holmes case, all of which have been pending before the court for months, and the charging conspiracy with the other two, receiving stolen goods.

"The people, too, will be interested in the final outcome of the indictment against Attorney-General Allen for larceny and Mr. Justice Pierce for conspiracy to obstruct justice.

"This decision is unjust; evidence is omitted or misquoted; facts misstated; believed; tender solicitude is extended to a man like Peters, lustful and vulgar actor of a blue blood family, and to others of a like character; the kindly offices of Reverend Father Sargent exerted in behalf of the Prendergast boy, offending for the first time, are characterized as "slender influence." It is not final, it cannot be final unless government by the people is at an end. Next November they will make their decision."

PELLETIER CASE IS COMPARED TO DREYFUS'

McSweeney Lauds Washington at Dedication of Roxbury K. of C. Building

The case of Joseph C. Pelletier, deposed District Attorney for Suffolk County, was likened to the Dreyfus case by Edward F. McSweeney, chairman of the Knights of Columbus Historical Commission, in an address which he made today at the dedication of the new Rose Croix Knights of Columbus, Building, No. 52 Warren street, Roxbury.

"In Massachusetts today," said Mr. McSweeney, "a group of men, setting themselves up as sanctified authority, have recently assumed the rights that belong only to the General Court as the representatives of the people.

"One of the highest officials in the Knights of Columbus, who in the last ten years has done more than any other individual to bring together and give stability to the order, has been the victim of this unwarranted procedure—almost an exact revival of the horrors of the Dreyfus case.

HISTORY IS RECALLED.

"The Knights were growing too strong. The same forces that would deny them the merited credit for their war work have again exhibited their power. This denial of the fundamental rights of the common criminal to appeal for exact justice is an act which will rise up to raise these men damnable for it. Yet you are expected to stand meekly and acquiesce in this assault on your fundamental liberties.

"The tendency to judicial usurpation of legislative functions in the country reminds us that a similar exercise of unwarranted authority by judges, who were courtiers first and magistrates by favor, precipitated a revolution in England and caused the people to act so that they could secure exact justice by forcing their courts to confine their activities to enforcing the law and not to attempt to usurp forbidden fields of government.

"The control of our democracy has passed into the hands of the 'insistent minority,' in which the 'dead hand' of inherited wealth dominates and controls all the important agencies of our daily lives."

PROMINENT SPEAKERS.

Mr. McSweeney was the chief orator. His theme was "The Message of Washington."

Besides Mr. McSweeney, the speakers were: Henry L. Shattuck, representative-elect; Mayor James M. Curley; Edward J. Brandon, P. D. D. S. K.; Victor Heath; Augustus Bacon; Henry A. Wyzanski, D. D. S. K.; C. Joseph Connell, P. G. K., Rose Croix Council, and Thomas F. Phelan, grand knight of Rose Croix Council.

Rev. Charles Ring, of St. Joseph's Church, Roxbury, acted as chaplain. Previous to the dedication the members of the council attended memorial mass for deceased members of the order at St. Joseph's Church.

Says Bar Association Will Act on Coakley

The Boston Bar Association intends to press for immediate trial of disbarment proceedings against Daniel H. Coakley, according to a statement made today by James J. McCarthy, counsel for the association.

In the disbarment proceedings against Attorney Coakley are many of the cases which figured prominently in the action which resulted in the removal of District Attorney Pelletier.

Among these are the Emerson Motors case, the Metropolitan Motors case, the Dorothy Cote Lawrence case, and the Agnes L. Smith case, which was dropped by Attorney-General Allen following the disappearance of the chief witness.

Coakley is charged with conspiracy with Pelletier and William J. Corcoran, former District Attorney of Middlesex County, to enforce settlement of claims by threats of criminal prosecution and extortion.

Big Eskimos Share Honors With Tiny Chihuahua at Show of Eastern Club

Dogs of all shapes, sizes, colors, schemes and vocal ability, from almost infinitesimal Chihuahuas to St. Bernards, were viewed by thousands of persons at the opening session of the tenth annual show of the Eastern Dog Club.

The show, held in Grand Hall, Mechanics Building, extends through today and tomorrow, and some of the most valuable dogs in the country are among the hundreds of entries.

One of the most interesting entries, about which the crowds gathered, most frequently, was the team of six Eskimo huskies which won the 120-mile international race at Berlin, N. H., February 2, 3 and 4. These dogs were the property of Arthur T. Walden of Wonalancet, N. H. Outside the pen was the sled which the huskies drew after them across the snow in the race.

The smallest dog in the show, and according to its owner, Mrs. Harry S. Peaster of Philadelphia, the smallest in the United States, was a two year old Chihuahua, which weighs only one pound four ounces.

St. Bernards (rough) dogs—First, T. E. L. Kemp's Carmen Victor.

St. Bernards (smooth) dogs—First, Groveland Kennels' Groveland Regale.

Great Danes, dogs—First, Harold Selfridge's Baby Duncan.

Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets act gently but firmly on the bowels and liver, stimulating them to natural action, clearing the blood and gently purifying the entire system. They do that which dangerous calomel does without any of the bad after effects.

All the worries of heavy, sickening, griping cathartics are derived from Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets without griping, pain or any disagreeable effects.

Dr. F. M. Edwards discovered the formula after seventeen years of practice, among patients afflicted with bowel and liver complaint, with the attendant bad breath.

Olive Tablets are purely a vegetable combination mixed with olive oil; you will know them by their olive color. Take one or two every night for a week and note the effect. 15c and 30c —Advertisement.

HART DEFENDS WASHINGTON AS A WRITER

Harvard Professor Corrects Historic Error That He Lacked Skill

Albert Bushnell Hart, professor of government at Harvard, today ridiculed the legends that have made Washington a combination of "Hercules, Napoleon Bonaparte and Little Lord Fauntleroy," and discredited belief that Washington did not write his own State papers and addresses.

Professor Hart spoke in the Old South Meeting House at the annual Washington's Birthday celebration by the Old South Association.

"Due mainly to a single historian," said Professor Hart, "there have grown up about Washington a host of legends which have no foundation in history, and which have produced a false Washington cult. This has produced in many the notion of an entirely superhuman Washington.

SPELLING PHONETIC.

"It has made of Washington a combination of Hercules, Napoleon Bonaparte and Little Lord Fauntleroy. It has made of him a combination that could have had no existence in fact.

"If Washington had lived today, he would have been the president of a railroad or a steel corporation or of some other great institution, so remarkable was his native ability in run anything. He had little schooling, nothing beyond a private tutor the three R's and a little Latin at some common school. For a long time his spelling was more phonetic than accurate.

"Without arithmetic the affairs of life are not to be managed successfully. A little geometry and algebra are also valuable,' he wrote at one time.

"The popular belief that Washington had little or no literary style and allowed his State papers and official addresses to be drafted by some one else is erroneous.

"Such striking phrases as 'Today one nation, tomorrow thirteen,' 'Influence is not government,' and 'If no change comes our downfall is as certain as A. B. C.,' are the work of a man of no small literary ability.

AWARD ESSAY PRIZES.

Before Professor Harte's speech prizes were awarded to Boston school children for essays on American history. Two second prizes of $25 each for papers on "The History of Piracy in American Waters," were awarded to Frank D. Klein of No. 18 East Cedarn street, Roslindale, a student at the West Roxbury High School, and to John K. White of No. 40 Rosecliff street, Roxbury, a student at the Boston Latin School.

On the subject "The History of the Executive Power," two thousand-word essays from 1691 to 1775," a first prize of $40 in gold was awarded to Hurd E. Crockett of No. 50 Atherton street, Roxbury, a student at the West Roxbury High School, and a prize of $25 to Robert M. Morrison, a student at Harvard College.

McGarry of High street, Brookline, may lose the sight of his right eye as the result of their scuffle when Dodge tried to arrest McGarry and two others for disorderly conduct today.

The affiver said he encountered McGarry and two companions at Green street and Union avenue, Jamaica Plain. All were intoxicated, he said, and when he approached them McGarry struck him. In the fight that followed the other two men fled.

Dodge finally subdued McGarry by striking him in the face with his fist. The blow was so forceful, physicians at the City Hospital say, that the sight of the right eye may be lost. Patrolman Dodge also was treated at the hospital and sent home.

IRELAND READY TO BUILD UP INDUSTRIES

Principal Commerce Will Be Through Combined Cork-Queenstown Port

By ROBERT J. PREW.
Universal Service Staff Correspondent
(Copyright, 1922, by Universal Service.)

Cork, Feb. 22.—Irish industries that are allied to agriculture are expected to revive very soon, though the need for importing coal is an unfavorable factor.

Ireland once had a thriving woolen goods industry, but it succumbed to English competition at Bradford. It may now be taken up again, if only to meet domestic needs and without great hopes of developing an export trade. Agricultural implements will probably continue to be imported, as there is no visible prospect of cheaper native manufacture.

The fisheries of Ireland afford perhaps the greatest scope for enterprise. Business men here are fully alive to the possibilities in this direction and to the need for providing adequate canning facilities. But the country has not had time to settle down, and the provisional government cannot be expected to do more than reorganize the various departments for the benefit of the first constitutional government that comes into office. Then, and only then, will it be possible to encourage enterprise in this and other matters of national importance.

NEW INDUSTRIAL ERA.

During the race congress held in Paris, E. J. Riordan, secretary of the Irish Industrial Development Association, spoke conservatively about the general outlook. He said that in the past while burdened with innumerable handicaps and without the power to control their economic affairs, the Irish people struggled slowly but successfully to keep alive the industries they possessed and, wherever possible, to establish new ones.

"Ireland," he added, "is now about to enter upon a new voyage of her industrial expedition, and the knowledge of what she has done in the past inspires hope for the future.

"Many are the problems which her government will be called upon to solve—such as the reclaiming of land periodically flooded, the further development of agricultural industries, the development of shipping and of all unifications of the internal transport services, fisheries, manufactures, etc.—and these will need careful and intelligent handling. I believe we shall appoint first-class men as consuls or trade representatives in all the principal countries.

AS TO TARIFF.

"I do not agree with the belief that the Irish government will impose a fairly heavy tariff on goods entering Irish ports, but I think that before long the government will set up a commission of independent experts to inquire into tariff and revenue matters."

Cork has acted swiftly in advancing her claim to become the national port of Ireland. In December, last, the harbor board brought over George F. Nicholson, chief engineer of the port of Seattle, to draw up a plan for the development of the port, and this plan has just been turned over to the provisional government with an application for a grant of $10,000,000 to cover the cost. The government's decision is likely to be favorable, although the claims of other ports will also be actively advanced.

In presenting his plan Mr. Nicholson said that Cork should be the national port of Ireland for the reason that it is at the southern extremity of the country and in the direct path of the Atlantic liners.

DUBLIN'S TRADE GOING.

Dublin is bound to lose to Cork what little overseas commerce she has, for the same reason that Liverpool is losing her mail, passenger and cargo business to Southampton. Cork Harbor should serve as a good transshipping point to the American exporter, who, with warehousing space in Cork, could distribute his goods to England and other North European countries.

The plan provides for the consolidation of Cork and Queenstown which are now two separate municipalities, the construction of a big new pier at Queenstown, and the widening and deepening of the main channel.

Here is the opinion on Irish economic possibilities of one of the leading merchants of Dublin, Sir Maurice E. Dockrell, who in 1918 was elected Unionist member of the Westminster Parliament for the Rathmines Division of Dublin, and with whom I have just discussed the business outlook.

"With our own government sitting in Dublin, we shall find that Irish affairs will be handled much more expeditiously than they have been by the Westminster Parliament. This will be of benefit to Ireland in innumerable ways, especially in business.

TO HOLD GRADUATION DESPITE PARENTS' PLEA

Attleboro, Feb. 22. — Despite the protest by parents against graduation exercises for the grammar school because of the attached expense, the school committee has voted to hold the graduation in 1922, but has issued a statement to the effect that a continuance of the graduations is problematical. The parents complained that because of the elaborate manner in which the exercises were carried out, children of parents in moderate circumstances were embarrassed.

SENATE IN SESSION DURING HOLIDAY

Washington, Feb. 22.—Although this is Washington's Birthday the Senate will be in session. The first business will be the reading of Washington's farewell address, in which the first President warned the country against forming entangling alliances with other nations. 55 Specially Priced Lots of New Spring Goods (Not "Mark-Downs")

AS REFRESHING as Spring sunshine, breaking through the dull clouds of "Mark-Down Sales," come three glorious days of "Opportunities" in new Spring merchandise.

"Opportunities" will not knock at your door often—even we do not know when they can come again. Whenever they come be prompt to act. "Opportunities" mean unusual savings.

Thursday, Friday and Saturday—although we cannot guarantee that lots will last all three days.

NEW SPRING wearing apparel—new dress fabrics—new home furnishings—everything new. That is the first standard by which an "Opportunity" item is judged before it can be advertised.

Everything at a price lower than it can be bought elsewhere, as far as we know—these three days, or any day. That is the second requirement for an "Opportunity" item.

"Opportunities" will be on sale at these prices Thursday, Friday and Saturday, but this advertisement will not be repeated; cut it out now and save it.

One other thing—it is impossible to guarantee that lots will last all of the three days.

We advise you to come early.

BEAUTY IS HARD LUCK, LILLIAN RUSSELL SAYS

Much Better to Be Brainy, and Not Quite So Nerve-Racking

London, Feb. 22 (By International News Service).—Feminine aspirants for pulchritude may accept it upon the undisputed word of Miss Lillian Russell that the life of a professional beauty is just one trial after another. Miss Russell, who in private life is Mrs. A. P. Moore, of Pittsburgh, is in Europe investigating immigration conditions.

"Being beautiful must be a trying experience," exclaimed a newspaper man after hearing Miss Russell deluged with requests from newspapers and individuals for her photograph.

"It is, indeed," agreed the American beauty; "there is nothing more trying. Mr. Lloyd George has not got half the job in trying to pacify the world that a professional beauty has in keeping her looks for thirty years.

"Half the pleasures of life are cut off from you. You must keep early hours. You must live very carefully. You must always be perfectly dressed. And all the time you are haunted by the thought that you are no longer as good looking as you were. Most women want to be beautiful, but I can assure them that it is better to be brainy.

"I remember once in New York while walking with my sister I had to step in to powder my nose. 'Thank God,' said my sister, 'that I am not a professional beauty. No one cares whether my nose is shiny or not.' But I had to care."

Cushing, all of Quincy, cruel and abusive treatment. Barbour Lowark of Plainville, vs. Bire Lowark, with cruel and abusive treatment. Jennie A. Packard, vs. George E. Packard, all of Brookville, deserted. Stanley W. Armstrong, vs. Grace A. Armstrong, all of Brookline, unfaithfulness. John Martella of Norwood, vs. Ida Martella of Boston, desertion. Malcolm H. Currie of Lowell, vs. Edyth L. Currie of Sharon, desertion. Amy C. Bell of Needham, vs. John W. Bell, gross and confirmed habit of intoxication. Filomena Lasalia, vs. Antonio Lasalia, all of Norwood, cruel and abusive treatment.

GIRLS WITH BOBBED HAIR BARRED AS TEACHERS

"Giddily attired" teachers with hair and skirts cut short and with evidence of rouge and lip stick are not wanted by school superintendents, according to representatives of the Eastern Teachers' Agency.

The school employment manager said:

"We do not encourage the bobbed hair applicant for a teacher's position; the one who uses make-up and dresses conspicuously when she tries to register with us. School superintendents will not employ them if any of objectionable is in evidence.

"Above all, women teachers must have the good sense to dress themselves in accordance with modesty and good taste. They must be an example in this, as in everything else, to the girls and boys whom they are to teach discipline."

HARDING WILL NOT OPPOSE RESERVATION

Addition to Treaty Will Nullify Efforts to Bind America in Pacific

By Universal Service.

Washington, Feb. 22.—It was a day of victory for the Senate irreconcilables in their opposition to the four-power Pacific treaty.

They succeeded in getting more than enough votes in the Foreign Relations Committee to force the adoption of a reservation upholding the right of Congress to act on any decision under the treaty affecting action in the Pacific.

With more than a majority of the committee pledged to support the reservation, it is now assured that the treaty will go before the Senate with the reservations attached to the ratifying clause and that the fight in the Senate will centre on the question of whether or not the treaty should be ratified with the reservations or rejected altogether.

HARDING NOT OPPOSED.

President Harding will not oppose the reservation and it will also receive the support of Senator Lodge, the Republican leader and member of the American delegation.

A draft of the reservation was shown to the President by Senator Moses, who called at the White House. The President told the Senator that although he still was of the opinion that nothing in the treaty made a reservation necessary he would not oppose it "if it would ease the situation in the Senate."

Senator Lodge informed the committee that he would support it, and all the Republican members of the committee with the exception of Senator Kellogg of Minnesota made similar statements. It is understood that all the Democrats with the possible exception of Senator Williams of Mississippi will support it.

ADOPTION IS PREDICTED.

Although Senator Underwood, one of the American delegates, will vote against the reservation, it is not believed he can hold many of the Democratic Senators in line against it. For this reason adoption of the reservation by the Senate was generally predicted following the action of the committee.

It is planned to vote on the reservation in the committee today and report the treaty to the Senate with the reservation attached.

The reservation was jointly drafted by Senators Moses, McCormick, Johnson, Borah and Brandegee—all irreconcilables—and was presented to the committee by Senator Brandegee. It is generally believed that it will completely nullify the efforts of the treaty framers to bind the United States into an alliance in which America's course of action in the Pacific region would be determined by a council of the four powers in the treaty. It will make action by Congress necessary in all cases where the four powers, meeting in conference, determine upon a course of action.

FIN. COM. URGES AUDIT OF TRANSFERS

In a special report, submitted to the House of Representatives, the Boston Finance Commission recommends that all transfers, except reserve fund, of the city of Boston shall require the approval of the auditor, finance commission and Mayor, corporation Counsel Arthur D. Hill says that the purpose of the accounting system of the city fails if the law is construed to allow expenditures in excess of an annual appropriation to be carried forward to be paid from the funds of the following year, even if no balance remains. This practice would permit an outgoing administration, he says, to cripple its successor.

BETTY ALDEN'S COMMENT ON BOSTON SOCIETY

Younger Smart Set Members in North Over Holiday

By BETTY ALDEN

THOUGH the weather man has consistently refused to be optimistic about the outlook over the holiday, the younger set of Boston have gone ahead with their plans to spend the time revelling in the snow throughout the northern part of New England.

Most of the Winter sport centres of New Hampshire, Vermont and Northern Massachusetts are all set for carnivals over Washington's Birthday and are counting on many of our best skaters, ski experts and coasting enthusiasts as guests. One of the features of the day at Gorham, New Hampshire is a parade in honor of the Carnival Queen, to be followed in the evening by masquerade skating.

Jaffrey, of course, leads in the list of attractive spots for week-end visitors, for the toboggan run and ice are in splendid condition. The snow there is twenty-four inches deep. Shattuck Inn, according to report, is crowded.

Laconia reports great excitement over the holiday, for this year there is to be a Winter derby. Thirty-six of the best trotting horses and pacers in New England are on hand for the event. A skating masquerade will wind up the day's activities there, too. At Sugar Hill excitement prevails, particularly in view of the ski run that has, they say, never been in such good condition. This run, nearly three miles in length, runs from the hotel in the White Mountains to Franconia Village. Small wonder that the ice and snows of New England hold no terror for the debutantes of Boston!

The announcement of the engagement of Miss Elizabeth Minot Clarke, daughter of Charles Edsa F. Clarke and Mrs. Chamberlain Clarke, of New York, to John F. Jelke, Jr., has more than a little local interest, for Miss Clarke was for a long time a resident of Boston. The Clarkes lived at the Hotel Charlesgate, on Beacon street, until they moved to New York a few years ago. The announcement was made by Mrs. Clarke at a luncheon given at Sherry's on Monday.

Miss Clarke was a student at Miss May's School and was actively interested in the sub-debutante affairs here. She was entered at Miss Spence's School in New York, and made her debut in that city four years ago. She is a great-niece of Dr. George Minot Garland and of the late Dr. Myron L. Chamberlain, of Boston. Her mother is a daughter of Dr. Cyrus M. Chamberlain, of Andover.

Mr. Jelke is a son of Mr. and Mrs. John F. Jelke, of Chicago, and is a brother of Ferdinand F. Jelke, of New York. The date for the wedding has not yet been set.

Members of the Longwood Cricket Club of Brookline are showing keen interest in the coming women's "draw doubles" tournament, scheduled for next Tuesday and Wednesday at the Chestnut Hill Covered Courts. Members enter their names and partners will be drawn. The tournament will be played from scratch.

The winners of last year, Mrs. Thomas Handasyde Cabot, of No. 232 Newbury street, and Miss Eleonora Sears, of No. 132 Beacon street, cannot enter. Mrs. Cabot is abroad at present, while Miss Sears sailed for Europe on the Olympic last Saturday. The runners-up of 1921 were Mrs. Marion Zinderstein Jessup, now of Wilmington, Delaware, and Mrs. Charles Magrane.

The women's national indoor singles championship, to be held at Chestnut Hill starting March 20 is also causing a great deal of speculation among the sporting enthusiasts. Miss Lillian Scharman, who has been playing some spectacular tennis in New York, has forwarded her entry, while Miss Cerea Baker, of New Jersey, will also play.

Those of the Boston players who have planned to enter are Mrs. A. L. Bremer and Mrs. Nat. W Niles, both of the Longwood club. R. Norris Williams, 2nd, vice-president of the club, will referee. It is to be supposed that Miss Edith Sigourney and Miss Leslie Bancroft, who have given good accounts of themselves in the courts of North and South, will be on hand to try to keep the championship at home.

PASTOR SAYS DANCERS "DRUNK OR FOOLS"

Poughkeepsie, N. Y., Feb. 22.—"Anybody who dances is either drunk or a fool," said the Rev. C. Wendell Wilson, addressing the members of the Federation of Young People's Societies. The federation met to thresh out the unpleasantness that arose when the Tabernacle Baptist Society threatened to withdraw from the federation if the Presbyterian Society went through with a dance to be held for the benefit of the church.

The lowest bid for the construction of a brick dwelling house for Sheriff Kelliher on Charles street was $28,247, more than $1,000 above the appropriation provided for the purpose. BRIDAL PARADE OF PRINCESS REHEARSED

King's Cavalry Escorts Drags Representing Royal Coaches in Line

By GERTRUDE LADY DECIES, Universal Service Special Correspondent.

London, Feb. 22.—A dress rehearsal for Princess Mary's wedding parade caused several thousand stenographers to arrive late at their downtown offices.

All the approaches to Westminster Abbey were closed, and the Royal Household Cavalry clattered through Whitehall fore and aft of a pair of horse drags representing the Princess' coach.

Troops also escorted other drags occupying places in the parade which will be taken by King George, Queen Mary and others.

The dresses of the bridesmaids have been completed, in each gown a straight under robe of ivory satin and galaie, veiled with handmade silver lace serves as a background for panels of cloth of silver with a girdle embroidered in mother-of-pearl paillettes and silver-lined crystals. Each is finished at one side with a silver rose of England intertwined with a true-lover's knot of Princess Mary's own blue.

Each bridesmaid will carry a bouquet of sweet peas, the delicate tints of which will combine beautifully with the white and silver gowns.

The gown which the Queen will wear is velvet brocaded on gold tissue. It is simply cut on the same lines as the Princess' gown and has a train. Its V-shaped corsage is outlined with embroideries in gold bugles and fastens at the left side.

WOMAN COLLECTS $15 FOR LITTLE CRIPPLE

The sad plight of little Clarence Nyman, the crippled youngster, who has been confined to his bed for two years in a poverty-stricken home at No. 418 Franklin street, Cambridge, continues to touch the hearts of the readers of the Boston American. Last week when his plight became known the Boston American appealed to its readers for a new crib for the boy. The crib was given and many gifts of money followed. Today $15 was received from Mrs. William J. Oser, who collected the sum in the office of her husband at No. 515 Washington street, for her husband a head of a ladies' and misses' coat and suit house, and the money was contributed by the employes.

MOTHER OF FOUR JAILED FOR THEFT

New York, Feb. 22.—Mrs. Mildred Hinat, twenty-six years old, who is mother of four children, besides being a skilled architectural draftsman was sentenced by County Judge Burt J. Humphrey in the Queens County Court, to the Bedford Reformatory on her plea of guilty to grand larceny in the second degree. Mrs. Hinat boarded in the home of Mrs. Catharine Elgin, at No. 20 Filmore Avenue, Corona, who charged that Mrs. Hinat stole four rings valued at $500 and household goods valued at $176.

VETERAN IN PLEA FOR 'REAL FIGHTERS'

"Waltham, Feb. 20, 1922.

"Editor Boston American:

"I am one of those unfortunates, so many of whom walk the streets of Boston and our other cities today. I am an ex-service man, looking for work of any kind. I am foot-sore, discouraged, and almost down-at-the-heels. I will be soon if I don't get work. I've walked miles through the city streets, a little money in my pockets to ball back on.

"I go hungry sometimes, and walk numberless miles to make what money I have last until I land a job. I've asked every place, but the same answer always comes: 'No work! No men wanted!'

"Four years ago I walked these same streets of Boston, and of many other cities, one of America's millions of fighting men, and, today, in the course of my hunt for work, I saw a sight that made me question the justice of all things.

FIGHTS FOR MONEY.

"I saw hundreds of men, crowding a certain street and approach to one of Boston's theatres, all eager to see one man. Hundreds more standing in line, eager and willing to pay any price to see this same man in action. Yes! This man is called a fighting man. A hero in the world of sport only.

"All the crowd excited because of Jack Dempsey, world's heavyweight champion. The kind of a fighter that fights any man who will guarantee him a small fortune. A fighter who fights for ten minutes for more money than ten of us poor fighters combined got in two years' service.

"He fights with a gun and no odds against him, while the other fighters carried a gun, had thousands against them, and fought countless times in the dark, with chances one hundred to one against them.

EX-SERVICE MEN BEGGING.

"And in and out of this crowd of hero-worshippers, went two thin, hungry, despondent looking men from the ranks of real heroes and fighters—two ex-service men, begging for enough to get food to warm their bodies, and keep them out of the gutter.

"No work, no help from any immediate source and so they resorted to the next thing above stealing. They were pan-handling. Not from choice, but from necessity.

"One poor devil had slept in stables and back alleys the last three weeks. Last night, a white man with a heart for a real fighter, is letting him sleep in the back room of his store. A poor place, but he at least will be under cover and warm.

PLEADS FOR HELP.

"Now tell me, Mr. Editor, and you, too, who read this, why hundreds are ready and willing to pay admission to see a real fighter? Are they eager to cheer him as a World's Champion—he who won the war and made the world safe for democracy? I can answer it here in this letter, 'no!'

"He who is a real fighter is forgotten, but aren't we, just as Dempsey, fighters and world's champions? He fought one while we fought thousands, and yet he is acclaimed 'The fighter,' while thousands of 'the fighters' are in want.

"Now people who read. Who is a 'Fighter'? Remember the real fighters and give them a chance. If he is out of work give him a job if you can. Help one and the rest of us are content.

"One of the Vets,
"H. P. A."

MARY TO QUIT AS DIRECTOR? NOT YET!

However, Opera May Lose Fair Leader—Such Wrangling With Male Stars

By International News Service.

New York, Feb. 22.—Mary Garden has not resigned as director of the Chicago Grand Opera Company, Mary Garden has made no statement publicly that she will resign. Furthermore, her secretary, Howard Potter, declared that he made no statement to that effect.

But——

Her associates understand that she will relinquish her directorship when the season closes and take her rank again as prima donna—minus the directorship. Mary is not saying a word publicly.

Sunday she caught a bad cold in Philadelphia. Last night her throat had to be sprayed copiously before her performance as Jean in "The Juggler of Notre Dame."

Reports that she is planning to cut short her tour and sail for Europe were denied by Potter.

"Nothing to it," he explained. "Miss Garden has just had a slight hoarseness. She will sing tomorrow night and then next week the company goes with her to Philadelphia. She intends to remain until the tour ends April 23, somewhere in Kansas."

It is an open secret, however, that the combination of overwork, wrangling with male stars and lack of time for sufficient rest has just about caused the diva to decide to quit her directing job, for which she receives no extra compensation.

KEEP URIC ACID OUT OF JOINTS

Tells Rheumatism Sufferers to Eat Less Meat and Take Salts.

Rheumatism is easier to avoid than to cure, states a well-known authority. We are advised to dress warmly; keep the feet dry; avoid exposure; eat less meat, but drink plenty of good water.

Rheumatism is a direct result of eating too much meat and other rich foods that produce uric acid which is absorbed into the blood. It is the function of the kidneys to filter this acid from the blood and cast it out in the urine; the pores of the skin are also a means of freeing the blood of this impurity. In damp and chilly cold weather the skin pores are closed thus forcing the kidneys to do double work, they become weak and sluggish and fail to eliminate the uric acid which keeps accumulating and circulating through the system, eventually settling in the joints and muscles causing stiffness, soreness and pain called rheumatism.

At the first twinge of rheumatism get from any pharmacy about four ounces of Jad Salts; put a tablespoonful in a glass of water and drink before breakfast each morning for a week. This is said to eliminate uric acid by stimulating the kidneys to normal action, thus ridding the blood of these impurities.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, harmless and is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia and is used with excellent results by thousands of folks who are subject to rheumatism. Here you have a pleasant, effervescent lithia-water drink which helps overcome uric acid and is beneficial to your kidneys as well. —Advertisement.

SAGE TEA TURNS GRAY HAIR DARK

It's Grandmother's Recipe to Bring Back Color and Lustre to Hair.

That beautiful, even shade of dark, glossy hair can only be had by brewing a mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur. Your hair is your charm. It makes or mars the face. When it fades, turns gray or streaked, just an application or two of Sage and Sulphur enhances its appearance a hundredfold.

Don't bother to prepare the mixture; you can get this famous old recipe improved by the addition of other ingredients at a small cost, all ready for use. It is called Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound. This can always be depended upon to bring back the natural color and lustre of your hair.

Everybody uses "Wyeth's" Sage and Sulphur Compound because it darkens so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied. You simply dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw it through the hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair has disappeared, and after another application it becomes beautifully dark and appears glossy and lustrous.—Advertisement.

TRY SULPHUR ON AN ECZEMA SKIN

Because of its germ destroying properties, this sulphur preparation instantly brings ease from skin irritation, soothes and heals the eczema right up and leaves the skin clear and smooth.

It seldom fails to relieve the torment without delay. Sufferers from skin trouble should obtain a small jar of Mentho-Sulphur from any good druggist and use it like cold cream. —Advertisement.

MATHILDE MAY NEVER WED SWISS

Belief Growing McCormick Gave Consent to Still Public Gossip

Chicago, Feb. 22.—Announcement was made today that Harold F. McCormick soon will accompany his younger daughter, Mathilde, now nearing seventeen, to Switzerland, where she may be married to Max Oser.

There are intimations that the wedding may never take place. It may be that Mathilde, who has been brought up in Switzerland and has never had an opportunity to meet many men, young or old, may change her mind, now that she is mixing with her own people.

Persons intimately acquainted with John D. Rockefeller do not understand how he came to wire his consent to the match, as he is unalterably opposed to international marriages. This leads to the conjecture that the family may see some way to avert the union and the consent of Mathilde's father and grandfather might have been given to still the clamor of the press.

Oser 44 Years Old, Swiss Records Show

Zurich, Switzerland, Feb. 22.—Max Oser, Swiss riding master, who will become the husband of Miss Mathilde McCormick, sixteen-year-old granddaughter of John D. Rockefeller, is forty-four years old.

Municipal records kept in Zurich show that Oser was born in Basel on December 16, 1877. The record of birth sets at rest rumors that Oser is forty-seven or fifty-seven years old. Oser is still travelling in French Switzerland, viewing historic castles with the idea of purchasing one as a home for his young bride-to-be.

Oser Willing to Be an American Citizen

Paris, Feb. 23.—Max Oser of Zurich, middle-aged fiance of Miss Mathilde McCormick, announced his willingness to become an American citizen if it is necessary to win the girl, according to a dispatch from Zurich today.

LAMSON SEES BOOM FOR HARDWARE TRADE

Arthur G. Lamson of Marlboro, president of the New England Hardware Association, addressed the members of the associatiith today at Mechanics Building. He dwelt at some length upon the difficulties experienced by the hardware trade during the year 1921, but predicted for the coming twelve months a very much more hopeful condition. He said the price of merchandise will cease and conditions of credit accounts will be very materially improved. With building costs better stabilized and reduced, and the amount of credit available for building increased, it is expected building operations will be considerably larger this year than last.

PRESIDENT AND LODGE TO TALK OVER TREATY

Senate Reservations Proposed for 4-Power Pact to Be Discussed at White House

By International News Service.

Washington, Feb. 22.—The Brandegee and other reservations proposed to the four-power Pacific treaty by Republican "irreconcilables" and Democratic Senators, constituting a majority of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, will be the subject of a conference between President Harding and Senator Lodge of Massachusetts, the committee chairman, before any of them are finally acted upon.

In making this announcement today after the Pacific pact was again discussed by the committee without any agreement having been reached regarding it, Senator Lodge said he expected to see the President about the proposed reservations "within the next twenty-four hours."

Senator Johnson of California, one of the Republican "irreconcilable" committee members, offered a new reservation to the Pacific pact at today's session which was intended to define the term "rights" employed in the Pacific pact, and to reserve to the United States the "entire liberty of judgment" regarding the validity or invalidity of those "rights" in the event of any dispute over them.

"BLOC" OPPOSES SHIP SUBSIDY, SAYS CAPPER

Washington, Feb. 22.—Organized opposition to the proposed ship subsidy was planned today by Senator Capper, Republican, of Kansas, and other Western members of the Senate "Agricultural Bloc." MOTION PICTURE NEWS

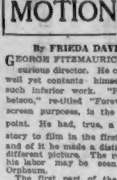
By FRIEDA DAVIS.

By FRIEDA DAVIS.

GEORGE FITZMAURICE is a curious director. He can do so well yet contents himself with such inferior work. "Peter Ibbetson," re-titled "Forever" for screen purposes, is the case in point. He had, true, a difficult story to film in the first place—and of it he made a distinctly indifferent picture. The results of his labor may be seen at the Orpheum.

The first part of the film is taken up in showing us the childhood of Mimsie and Gogo, later to be known as the Duchess of Towers and Peter Ibbetson, respectively. We see the careless, unfettered life they live in France. We see the contentment of their parents, the thwarted love of old Colonel Ibbetson for Gogo's mother and the sudden death of both the boy's parents.



ELSIE FERGUSON

He is taken to London by the Colonel, leaving Mimsie, and promising to come back for her "when he gets to be a man." Fitzmaurice and his wife, Ouida Bergere, who adapted the novel and play to the screen, have given these early scenes a great length. It may seem that they have gone into it too thoroughly, but after all, they only "set the scenes" for the rest of the story.

WALLACE REID APPEARS.

Wallace Reid then comes on the scene as Peter. He rebels at leading the renegade life his uncle tries to force on him and is turned out of the house. He goes to a suburb of London and there becomes a clerk and mixes in unnecessary prize fights. It is at the opera that he first sees the Duchess of Towers and later meets her in France visiting their old home. Then he learns of her marriage and promises never to see her again.

Later Peter runs into his uncle at the theatre, engages him in a fight for insulting his mother, and follows him home to kill him. After that comes the prison scene and the scene at the gallows. These are by far the best bits of the production. This, too, is the only place in which Wallace Reid does any acting whatever. He gets into the spirit of the thing and puts feeling into his playing.

After that comes the commutation of his death sentence to that of life imprisonment. He and Mimsie live their dream lives until their deaths. The settings have been unnecessarily overdone, sometimes to amount to little less than burlesque. The opening scenes in the garden give one the impression of a snowstorm, so heavily do the apple blossoms fall. The interiors are somewhat better.

PRISON SETTING BEST.

The settings of the prison and the gibbet are quite the finest parts of the picture. The early morning fog rolling in, giving just the shadowy outline of the gallows, and then softening the outlines of the prisoner and his guard mounting the scaffolding are masterful. As for the scenes through the "dream window," in which appear the countries they happen to wish to be at the moment, they could hardly be more badly carried out. The sudden appearance of the Yosemite, Rome, Vesuvius and India looked like nothing so much as an assortment of post cards. One expected at any moment to see the inscription, "Having a fine time. Wish you were here," appear.

As for the acting, all honors go to Georges Faweett for his playing of the role of old Major Duquesnois. He is splendid. There is a mellowness, a rounding-out, and a depth to his performances that take him out of the rut of character actors. At the end of the picture, when Peter returns to France and finds the old major a decrepit, weak, old man, who is losing his reason, Mr. Fawcett is startling.

ELSIE FERGUSON ACTS.

Elsie Ferguson is seen as the Duchess of Towers. She manages to do more acting than she usually gives us—and looks less beautiful. The period costumes were trying and the lighting, dim and irresolute, was not becoming.

Elliott Dexter has a comparatively small role, that of Gogo's father. He does very well with a part lacking in color and action. Montague Love is extremely villainous as Colonel Ibbetson, but he seems always to be playing a part. Jim feels like a room as the directors calls "Cut!" Mr. Love will straightway relax and sigh deeply. He seems at a tension.

Wallace Reid found himself miscast in "Dynamy Peter." Even time to time his light comedy manner cropped up, spoiling the illusion of his serious moments. He is in no way Peter Ibbetson.

PREVAILED UPON MRS. CARTER TO RETURN

Reappearance on Stage of Celebrated Actress Due to Arch Selwyn

By FRED J. McISAAC.
Dramatic Editor.

Mrs. Leslie Carter would never have come back to the American stage if it hadn't been for Arch Selwyn. The dominant executive of the Selwyns' firm—for that's what Archie is called since Edgar Selwyn is the playwright—manipulated the angles which encouraged the celebrated lady to again appear in public, and next Monday night, at the Selwyn Theatre, Archie will receive the same applause that the enthusiastic audience at the premiere in New York showered him with when the fact became known through Mrs. Carter's curtain speech.

"I was content in my French villa," says Mrs. Carter, "from the assertive roads of ambition. In the heyday of my youth the American public had rather set me on a pedestal, and through the years which followed they had kept me there. But it had been seven or eight years, and I don't believe I ever would have had the courage to come back and see if my pedestal was still there had not Mr. Selwyn come to me that dimmer and revived my faith in myself.

"He told me about 'The Circle.' He said the role of Lady Kitty could not be better suited to me if it had been written expressly for me. He said it was a pity for me to fritter away the days in France. You know this Archie Selwyn is a convincing manager.

"And so here I am—here in the part he wanted me to play, and next week I'll be in Boston."

RAID REVEALS STILLS VALUED AT $10,000

Ten thousand dollars' worth of stills, moonshine, mash and other materials was seized by Watertown and Federal officers in a raid on a barn in Brookline street, near the Ridgelawn Cemetery, Watertown. Patrick Galvin, owner of the barn, told the police Napoleon had leased the place for two months. The prisoner had $700 in currency in his pockets. In the cellar two 100-gallon stills were found in operation and a 125-gallon still had just been installed.

COOLIDGE SAYS U. S. FOLLOWS WASHINGTON

Adopts Policy of Father of His Country, Vice-President Tells Johns Hopkins Men

By Associated Press.

Baltimore, Feb. 22.—The United States has adopted toward the world the policy of George Washington, not a policy of "dictation, coercion or imperialism, but of co-operation and helpfulness and of faith in the sanction of the universal conscience of mankind," Vice-President Coolidge declared in an address here today at Johns Hopkins University.

America stands ready, he said, to bear its share of the burdens of the world, but it "cannot live the life, of other peoples or renew from them the necessity of working out their own destiny."

The willingness of the American people to make sacrifices for the welfare of the world, he said, was shown by the policy pursued by their government in calling the Washington conference and particularly its proposal for the reduction of naval armament, which, he said, was the "voice of the people" and not of "one man, one party or one administration."

Of the other major accomplishment of the conference, the four-power Pacific treaty, he declared it has "great strength in its simplicity" and that it "rests on the sanction of justice."

Washington, as leader in the nation's struggle for independence, Mr. Coolidge said, accepted the help of foreigners, but "he declared if the cause was to be won it must be won by Americans relying on themselves."

"It was this truly American view," the Vice-President said, "which not only saved the revolution, but after its conclusion saved what it had won."

The senior class alone had a perfect record, while eight juniors and sixteen sophomores were separated.

Head of Donkhobours in Canada Says the Plan Has "My Complete Sanction"

By International News Service.

Vancouver, B. C., Feb. 22.—Peter Veregin, head of the Russian religious sect known as the Doukhobours, today confirmed reports that he had suggested a plan whereby the children of the colony under ten years of age, together with the aged and infirm, be drowned as a protest against alleged exorbitant taxation.

Once rid of those unable to travel, Veregin proposed that his followers abandon their farms and wander over the country, preaching the coming of Christ and living as the "ugrast working class."

While announcement of the plan was made by M. Koftinoff, head of the sect in British Columbia, Mr. Veregin, in a telegram to the Canadian press, declared that "it had my complete sanction.

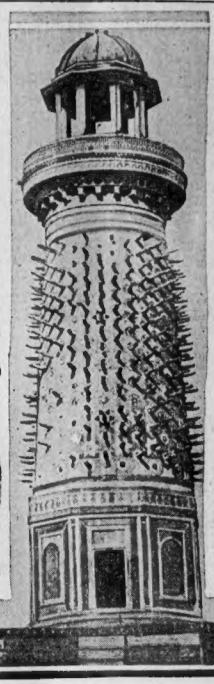
GIRL WIFE CHARGES HUSBAND MADE HER FORGER

BOBBING ALONG! "Whim and walk a mile" has no terrors for these girls (at left), first prize winners in the women's event at the interstate bobsled races held at Locust Valley, L. I. They are members of the Locust Valley Club, and made the mile course in exactly one minute. The sled was piloted by Miss Edith Angore. Photograph shows the start of the race. (International)



SHIP AHOY! This ship model, now owned by Miss Malynda Zankel of Milwaukee, was built in 1625, and is the original model of the "City of Bremen," a convoy which accompanied fleets of merchant ships laden with riches. (International)

THIS monument was erected in the heart of the Sahara Desert on the exact spot where General Laperrine of France died while trying to fly across the desert. (Wide World)

ANOTHER GRAVE SUBJECT! Indian Maharajahs grow as much attached to their elephants as we of the Western World develop a fondness for a horse or dog. This giant tomb was erected over the grave of a favorite elephant by Akbar the Great at Fullypore Sikri. The tombstone is studded with tusks. (Wide World)

FILM FLIM FLAM! Louise Lorraine, filmite, entrusted $125 to one Leo Dondy to "play a Chinese lottery," and apparently he didn't "play fair," so he found himself in a Los Angeles court. Louise thought the whole affair was a joke. (International)

A RAILROAD TOWN! This is probably the oddest village in the world, for nearly every house in it is a reconstructed railroad coach. Called Shoreham and is in England. (Wide World.)

HUNGRY? These coed witches (above) will at least appease the eye. Carefree and gay, the girls of the younger set at Palm Beach are glad to discard stiff formality for the fun of the moment. Half a dozen States are represented.

SPRING'S BEWITCHING EYE BECKONS! This charming suit, suitable for almost any type of figure, should suit the most exacting tastes. Consists of a gray broadcloth skirt and an oddly cut coat of blue serge, crossed diagonally by matching gray stripes. Ideal for early Spring wear. (Underwood.)

CROWNED! Mlle. Renee Durand, 18, who was elected Queen of the Lenten festival ceremonies over a large field of competitors. She is a shopgirl, and won because of her simplicity and youth. (International.)

OVER THE RIVER! One of the most unusual funeral cortèges ever witnessed recently wended its slow way over a frozen river in the Spreewald, Germany, with the coffin on a sled and the mourners tagging behind and pulling the sled on skates. The lone figure in the centre is pushing the chief mourner on a sled.

MRS. MARIE D'ANDREA, 25, of Chicago, who says her husband forced her to forge a check under pain of death. She alleges that his motive was revenge, because she had sued him for divorce.

BUTTON, BUTTON, ETC.! Fashion has decreed that the new bathing suits must have buttons on them. Marie Norber of Chicago is here shown with the latest model of this type.

SHE STOOPS TO CONQUER! Have you thought of reducing? Here's an ideal, but arduous, method that is guaranteed to "cure or kill." Miss Dorothy Smith, a pupil of the Amelia Burnham dancing studio of Boston, claims the distinction of being one of the few girls in the country to do this. Is she right? Elbow must touch the toes.

RATHER HARD ON THE KIDS! Feeding her own kids is difficult enough, but it gets this Nanny's goat to also serve as mother to two little pigs. This entertaining photograph was taken on a farm in Thierleben, East Prussia, where livestock is scarce owing to the depredations of the Russian army during the war. (Gilliams.)

SHORT SKIRT IS O. K., INSISTS OPPENHEIM

British Author Would Drive Out Reformers; Amazed at Liquor Violations

Abbreviated styles for women have a staunch advocate in E. Phillips Oppenheim, noted British author, who was in Boston today for a brief visit. He declared to a Boston American reporter that he admired the modern styles greatly, and that he would regret any change in the interests of prudishness.

Interviewed at the home of Huling C. Brown, one of the directors of his publishers, at No. 15 Garrison road, Brookline, the author said:

"The best features of the American girl are her intelligence and sense of humor. I think the American girl matures mentally far earlier than the girls of other nations, particularly those of England. This is perhaps responsible for her less desirable features, such as lack of respect for her elders and impatience with the established order of things. Probably it is also responsible for her desire for freedom, as expressed in cigarette smoking and other things.

"I don't think human nature is any different now than it was a thousand years ago. All this talk of the reformers is merely a craze that will pass away.

"The reformers should be driven out of the country. Take prohibition. I think the most remarkable thing about it is the good humored way in which you Americans accept it and the brazen manner in which the law is violated.

"In New York a friend and I dined in a large hotel. The captain said 'Cocktails, gentlemen?' We said 'Yes, of course, and we were served, with Martinis.

"During the course of dinner we were asked if we cared for an olive. My friend said: 'No, but we would like champagne.' A quart of old vintage champagne was brought to us and placed openly in a bucket of ice beside the table. I never saw anything quite so brazen.

"While riding on the train from New York to Boston practically every man in the car had a flask.

"I first became acquainted with the American cocktail nearly 30 years ago.

"My only regret is that I can't carry them with me. I suppose I might carry a thermos bottle of cocktails together with a flask for Scotch. Possibly I might have a belt made with compartments similar to those on a cartridge belt. Then I might carry a flask in another compartment a thermos bottle of cocktails and in a third a small carafe of liquor.

"Mr. Trimas never catch up with me when I am in America. I have traveled all over the States in borrowed dress clothes, as now nothing of shirts and collars. I have on one of my host's suits now."

ARMORY UNAFFECTED IF NAVY YARD CLOSES

Springfield, Feb. 22.—Colonel Phalon C. Ainis, commandant of the Springfield Armory, said that he had not been informed of the possible closing of Charlestown Navy Yard and if it did close it would hardly affect the Springfield Arsenal. The amount of work here for the navy yards during the past two years has been insignificant, declared Colonel Ainis.

A BOUFFANT gown and a slander one, no less appealing because it happens to be less spectacular, may go to the bath together. The fair-haired young person at the left wears French blue satin, upon which plaques of ivory velvet with appliqued flower motifs of rose and mauve are posed. One such plaque adorns the front of the quaint little bodice and four are used at intervals around the lower part of the gathered skirt. The sleeves—if sleeves they be—are also of the ivory velvet, in sections that fall back from the naive off-the-shoulder neckline like gracefully drooping petals.

BLACK net weighted rather than fitted into place by rows and rows of iridescent paillettes is worn over a clinging black satin slip that accentuates the whiteness of the wearer's throat and is visible as a pointed drapery at the sides of the skirt. Lines of jet in "V" formation trim the front of this gown and its wide square train.

GUNMEN HOLD UP BANK RUNNER; STEAL $3,100

The police are searching for three young men about twenty-five years of age who held up John Murphy, an overseas veteran and bank messenger for the Somerville Trust Company, on College avenue, West Somerville, and made off with a bag containing $3,100 in cash and checks.

The holdup, the boldest in Somerville in years, was enacted in daylight, on a thoroughfare which is well traveled by pedestrians and automobiles. Murphy had a few minutes previously left the plant of the Francis S Cummings Company, milk and cream dealers, on Boston avenue, as was his daily custom, with the money of the company, enroute to the bank.

Murphy noticed that he was being crowded on College avenue by another automobile, which contained three young men. Almost in front of the home of former Alderman Eugene M. Carman, the machine pushed Murphy's car onto the sidewalk. As he turned around he looked into the muzzle of a gun. Two men jumped out and while one of them leaped on the running board and took a revolver from a holster on Murphy's person, the other man went to the rear of the sedan and took the bag of money from a small safe which Murphy failed to lock.

Three young men, picked up in an automobile by the police of the Dudley street station, Roxbury, as suspects, were released from custody after Lieutenants Dumcy and Kennedy of the Somerville police and Murphy scrutinized them.

The man who took the gun also took the key out of the automobile. All three jumped into their car and sped away in the direction of Davis Square.

The numbers and the description of the car were obtained by the police. The numbers, on cardboard, are believed to be false.

JOHNSON MOVES RESERVATION ON TREATY

By International News Service.

Washington, Feb. 22.—Senator Hiram Johnson of California, one of the Republican "irreconcilable" committee members, offered a new reservation to the Pacific pact at today's session which was intended to define the term "rights" employed in the Pacific pact, and to reserve to the United States "full liberty of judgment" regarding the validity or validity of those "rights" in the event of any dispute over them.

The Johnson reservation was also intended, it was explained, to prevent the United States from being committed to any guarantee of any of those "rights" which may be claimed by some powers as valid, but by others deemed invalid.

It was denied by Senator Lodge that he had formally accepted the Brandegee or any of the proposed reservations. It was understood previously that the Brandegee reservation was not only acceptable to Lodge but that it had been submitted to the French who while regarding it unnecessary had not offered any objection to it.

The situation had apparently changed overnight, however as Lodge was said to have renewed his opinion of section today that reservations to the Pacific pact are unnecessary.

CHARGES HE GOT $1,000 TO STAGE "HOLDUP"

Jersey Man Held After Alleged Confession Accuses Woman as $50,000 Plotter

Long Beach, N. J., Feb. 22 (By the Associated Press)—Confessing, police said, to be paid $1,000 by Mrs. Sarah H. Robertson to stage the holdup in her home at their last Saturday night, in which she claimed to have been robbed of a bankroll containing $50,000 in jewels, John Bailey, twenty, was arrested here today on a charge of conspiracy.

Police authorities announced they were acting on Asbury Park for a warrant for the arrest of Mrs. Robertson.

The bag supposed to contain the jewels, Bailey said, was a prop filled with white tissue paper and the "season" which Mrs. Robertson gave her guests had developed as a pearl handled, automatic pistol equipped with a silencer was actually a pipe case. The bag and its contents, together with the pseudo gun, were turned over to the local police.

Bailey who is the son of respectable parents, declared he was approached last November by a man whose name he gave, when asked, but that Mrs. Robertson would know him. That he took part in a fake holdup especially to aid her in defrauding the latter's insurance company.

He refused.

A week ago Sunday, he told the police, the man approached him and told him he would be paid $1,000 if he would help stage a holdup. He refused, and the fake holdup followed.

He was held without bail, pending an investigation.

$70,000 LIQUOR SEIZURE AT SALEM

Federal Officers Drive Motor Boat Ashore and Secure 700 Cases

Whiskey and gin valued at $70,000 was seized by Federal officers aided by the local police in a raid on a stranded motor boat in Salem harbor here today.

The motor boat Wilkins 2nd of Gloucester grounded on the sand flats near the wharves on the Beverly side of the harbor. A small contingent of federal officers pursuing the liquor boat also went aground.

The five members of the crew of the Wilkins 2nd jumped overboard and waded ashore in the hope that the captain, who was ill, was placed under arrest in his bunk.

Wilson B. Hurley, the Federal officer who directed the raid said he found the cargo of the Wilkins 2nd had been taken aboard from a large steamer, possibly from Bermuda, somewhere off the coast. The 700 cases of liquor taken from the Wilkins 2nd were transferred in trucks to the custom house.

A truck, said to be owned in Peabody, was found waiting on the wharf by the officers when the Wilkins 2nd grounded. It was not seized.

Increases the action of the intestines

Doctors are now agreed that proper elimination of waste matter should be brought about by food. One doctor comes right out and states plainly that the indiscriminate use of cathartics is one of the causes of constipation.

Physicians all over the country are recommending Fleischmann's fresh yeast because it is a fresh food, rich in those elements which keep the intestines healthy. In one series of tested cases, normal functions were restored in from 3 days to 5 weeks.

Try it out for yourself. Begin today by adding 2 or 3 cakes of Fleischmann's Yeast to your everyday diet. Keep it up and see how normally and regularly your intestines act. Be sure it's Fleischmann's Yeast—the familiar tin-foil package with the yellow label. Place a standing order with your grocer.

BOSTON AMERICAN SPORTS

BIG CROWD TURNS OUT FOR LEGION GAMES AT ARMORY TRACK

Opportunity to witness in action an array of world's record holders which included Earl J. Thomson of Dartmouth; Joie Ray of the Illinois A. C., and Jake Driscoll of Boston College, caused local track fans to head for East Armory today to witness the annual indoor games and relay meet of the Massachusetts American Legion

The program appeared the most attractive yet offered by the ex-soldier organization, with a list of invitation events which included a 50-yard dash, 50-yard high hurdles, the Gaston 600-yard run, the Boston mile and a running high jump, and an array of handicap and schoolboy events, and schoolboy, college and Legion relay races.

* * *

Rare competition and new records were confidently expected by many of the fans before the last number on the program was contested, for the field in almost every event brought together the very best athletes of the section and nation.

* * *

The contests in which the greatest interest centered were the Boston mile with Joie Ray, Jimmy Connolly, Mike Devanney and Larry Shields as the quartet which faced the starter's gun, the Gaston 600, in which Jake Driscoll lined up against W. J. Stevenson of Princeton, Sid Leslie of the New York A. C., Dave Caldwell of the B. A. A. and several others of almost equal repute; the 50-yard high hurdles, in which Earl Thomson clashed with Dick Whitney of Harvard, Joe Sullivan, the former B. C. timber-topper; Billy Meanix of the B. A. A. and Olympic team; the running high jump, in which Ray Brown of Dartmouth clashed with Dick Landon of the New York A. C., and Walter Whalen, the former B. A. A. star; the two-mile relay race, in which the speedy Boston College team met the Tech array which recently downed Harvard, and the medley relay event in which the Massachusetts and New York Legion teams were the competitors.

SCHOOL EVENTS CALL STARS FROM ALL NEW ENGLAND

By FRED C. LANE.

New England's best schoolboy track stars were out in full force at the Legion meet. The lads were in fine running trim for the events.

Three events were open to the schoolboys. In addition there were several relay races. The open events were at 50, 440 and 1,000 yards. In the relay races Newton opposed Brookline, Boston College High raced the best four from St. James' High of Haverhill, Boston Latin, Dorchester and English staged a triangular affair; Hyde Park, South Boston and Winthrop had a suburban race and West Roxbury and Boston Trade had a battle.

* * *

Ralph Colson in the 50-yard dash, Larry Summers of Huntington and Carter Billings of West Roxbury, Ralph Colson of Allen Military, Clarence McDavitt of Newton, Fennell Reilly of Medford and Harrington Moore of the same school were a few of the luminaries who competed.

* * *

Richard MacFarland of Huntington School who has been exceptionally good at the 440, Jim LaFayette of Noble & Greenough and Moore were also star participants.

The best 1,000-yard boys who competed were Tom Cavanaugh of Boston College High who broke the record at the Huntington School meet, Martin Davison of Medford, a consistent winner at this mark all season, but who is hardly strong enough after his recent illness, Parker McDevitt of West Roxbury, John Fitzpatrick of Boston Latin and Wesley Dicks of Newton.

* * *

The Cambridge Latin hockey team will have easy sailing in its remaining game in the Greater Boston Interscholastic Hockey League. There is no serious obstacle to the fiery Cantabs winning the championship.

* * *

The Cambridge team was far superior to the Melrose, judging by past performances. After the first period those played defensive hockey but their checking back went for naught against the attack of the Cambridge team.

Captain "Tabber" Cronin played a slashing game. In the second period just before he made a sensational dash down the ice for the only score he missed an easy chance to register.

Harold "Red" Grealn was the best all around performer of the evening. Time and again efforts was made to dump him from the ice but they were useless. His checking back of the [illegible] attack of the Melrose players brought rounds of applause from the large gathering of Cambridge fans who were out in large numbers to cheer for the team.

* * *

A double header hockey contest at the Arena this afternoon started at 2 p. m. Newton High and Arlington and Cambridge Latin and Rindge Tech. played. The last contest was for the championship of Cambridge.

* * *

The Newton-Arlington game was the main attraction. Two well matched teams displayed their wares.

BOSTON Y BASKETBALL FIVES WILL PLAY THEOLOGS

The Boston Y. M. C. A. basketball quintets will play the Boston University Theological School teams on the Huntington avenue courts.

W. Fouke, the six-six centre of the Theologs, is the star of the Ministers' team.

The "Y" 1920 team will take on the B. U. second quintet in the other game and in this contest T. Chiu, Chinese speed boy, will be seen in action as well as M. Johnson, premier foul shot of the 1920 team.

* * *

On Thursday night the Watertown Town team will take on the Central Square A. A. at the Town Hall, Watertown.

Murphy and Melley of B. C. will be in the Central Square lineup Thursday night and should furnish plenty of opposition for the Watertown team.

* * *

The Northeastern basketball five will leave Thursday night for a week-end trip to New York, playing Seton Hall at Orange, N. J., Friday and meeting the Crescent Athletic Club at Brooklyn Saturday night.

This is a heavy assignment for the Engineers, but despite defeats by close scores, they are travelling at a fast clip and hope to give a good account of themselves.

The men are in excellent shape and Coach Jeffery will be able to present his strongest lineup. A squad of ten men will make the trip.

* * *

The Canton K. of C. basketball team wants games with fast teams during the month of March. Watertown Town team and Boston Council especially desired. Can give return games. Address James Kelliher, Canton K. of C.

HUSTON DENIES PEACE WITH JOHNSON

But Leaves Active Warfare on American League Head to Harry Frazee

By William J. Chipman,

New York, Feb. 22.—The Rialto still rings with tales of peace between Til Huston of the Yankees and President Ban Johnson of the American League, but the jovial Colonel issued a denial as formal and stern as his habitual good nature would permit.

"It ain't so," was the Colonel's thrust. He then became unnaturally taciturn, but he intimated several leading facts. The sum and substance of the conversation was that Harry Frazee missed his mark when he broadcasted the information that the Colonel and Ban Johnson were possessed of brotherly love for each other.

* * *

Colonel Huston neither denied nor affirmed the report that he visited Ban Johnson's apartment in a Washington hotel when American League magnates gathered in the capital recently, but he indicated that such a visit could have taken place without altering the relations that have existed between the league president and the New York and Boston owners since the dispute over Carl Mays in 1919

YOUNG BRAVES PITCHER TAKES HIS PEN IN HAND

The enclosed letter from Eugene H. Lansing, one of the Braves' new left-hand pitchers, surely shows that he has the right stuff in him and indicates how he feels about the club being up in the race the coming season.

Mr. George W. Grant, President, Boston National League Baseball Co.,

Dear Sir—Just a few words to let you know I am in wonderful condition and anxious for the season to start. Have been [illegible] in the State of Vermont doing lumber jack work. It has hardened me all [illegible] work [illegible] being one thing that has developed me physically, and it has given me an enormous appetite. Good rest, regular meals and outdoor work spell nothing else but "READY" in capital letters.

Have had a very pleasant Winter and am anxious to receive final reporting instructions soon, can't wait for the time to [illegible] the spiked shoes and show you and Mr. Mitchell I am anxious to remain a "brave" hurler. Give the Braves two winning pitchers along with the veterans and they, or the club rather, will be up in the race.

ARLINGTON HIGH GIRLS BEATEN BY WELLESLEY

The Arlington High School girls basketball five bowed to the Wellesley High School girls' quintet, for the second time this Winter, in an exciting game, 36 to 25.

Miss Quimby, playing forward for the winners, was the leading scorer, with 26 points to her credit. Miss Fletcher, who played the other forward position most of the game, made the other 10 points.

TWENTY SWIM RECORDS SMASHED IN 1921

The names of Mrs. Charlotte Boyle-Clune and Miss Ethelda Bleibtrey in the women's division, and of John Weissmuller and Norman Ross in the men's section, head the compilation of new world's swimming records made by individuals in free style competition in 1921, and accepted by the Amateur Athletic Union.

This quartette accounted for no less than fourteen of the sixteen records credited to natators in American waters or pools last year. The two remaining marks went to Miss Margaret Woodbridge, of Detroit, and Lady Langer, the former University of California star who came from Hawaii for a tour of the States.

In all twenty new standards were established in free style swimming last year. The other four were made in Honolulu Harbor, two each for Miss Bleibtrey and Frank Beaurepaire of Australia. Warren Kealoha, the Hawaiian, set a new backstroke record for 150 yards in Honolulu Harbor, while Miss Sybil Bauer, of Chicago, was credited with a new backstroke record for 100 yards.

The outstanding performer of the year was John Weissmuller, the gangling Chicago youth of seventeen, who in his first year of competition turned in five records. Four of these he made in a three-day meet in New York in the 75-foot pool at Brighton Beach.

FUTURE DEMPSEYS WILL CLASH TONIGHT AT ST. JOSEPH'S SHOW

By JACK CONWAY.

The future Jack Dempseys will permit an eager public to rate their punching power at the St. Joseph's T. A. Society's amateur show at Commercial Hall, Bowdoin square, tonight. We feel rather confident that George Washington and his friend Lafayette would be at the ringside if they were in our midst. Colonels McKirdy and McCarthy and General Cuddy, however, will try to fill the gap, as it were.

According to General Cuddy, who hands out the munitions to the amateurs, there will be battles at 118, 126, 135 and 147 pounds and in the heavyweight division.

It is expected that Whitey Allen of Hyde Park and Alvin Randall of South Boston will deliver the big socks in one of the heavyweight quarrels. Allen has a knockout victory to his credit over Randall and would like to repeat. The brave policeman, on the other hand, is just as eager to place the skids under Allen.

* * *

Paddy Owens, one of the best of our bantamweights, will have Tommy Nee of South Boston as an opponent in a big show at Salem this afternoon. Owens has been traveling along the pugilistic highways at a lively clip as he proved by his two victories over Johnny Sheppard at Lynn. As Nee recently was awarded a decision over Freddy Madden at Lynn, he feels rather confident he will be able to hand Owens a setback.

* * *

Matchmaker Hayes has surrounded these boys by an attractive card. Everybody who enjoys ring action should be satisfied.

Eddie Shevlin will require all of his remarkable ability as a boxer if he is to avoid defeat when he clashes with Nate Siegal at the Armory A. A.'s show at Mechanic's Building next Tuesday night. Siegal appears to have regained the fighting form that enabled him to win the New England welterweight championship from Young Kloby. Siegal's recent brilliant battles with Mickey Walker and Tommy Robson have caused many of the wise men to wager their money on the Revere boy's chances of victory in the coming title quarrel.

* * *

Shevlin and Siegal, like Langford and Jeanette in the old days, always put up a real fight. There is never any stalling or jockeying for position once these boys go into action. Siegal is always forcing the issue, while Shevlin seems to disregard scientific boxing and resort to straight, old-fashioned fighting when pitted against his famous rival.

* * *

Paul Doyle, who claims the junior welterweight championship of the world, will challenge the winner. Doyle recently battled Shevlin and for five rounds had the margin. Shevlin's weight advantage then enabled him to forge into the lead and grab the decision.

* * *

The Riverton A. A. will present a bang-up amateur show at its meeting at the Chelsea Theatre Saturday night. This organization has already put on some splendid shows, and its card Saturday night is expected to surpass any of its previous efforts.

* * *

Now that Eddie Mack is back on the active list once more Abe Friedman, New England bantamweight champion, is sure to be kept very busy in the ring. Mack has Friedman training and says the boss of the local little fellows is open to meet any of the opposition.

* * *

Willie Harmon, who also battles under Mack's colors, is also anxious for an opportunity to increase his ring batting average.

* * *

"Eddie Mack says Friedman is ready to start," declared Meyers. "If this is so, the bantamweight champion will not have to wait long for action. Madden is in splendid physical condition and is boxing better than at any time during his career and he is confident he will be able to surge to victory.

"I am prepared to post a $500 forfeit in order to bind a tussle between Friedman and Madden."

* * *

Cy Goodwin comes to bat with the announcement that he has received an offer from a Syracuse promoter for the services of Charlie Parker, South End lightweight, who aspires to grab the New England lightweight title.

Goodwin also announced that Young Gould is ready for ring action once more.

GIRL GOLFERS NOT TO MAKE TRIP ABROAD

New York, Feb. 22.—Miss Glenna Collett, the Providence, R. I., girl who won the Berthellyn cup and the Eastern women's golf championship last year, will not go to England for the British women's championship tournament this year.

Miss Alexa Stirling of Atlanta, former national champion, and Miss Marion Hollins, her conqueror, already have announced that they will not accompany the party that will seek the British title.

With Miss Collett they were considered the foremost American representatives.

MOST IMPORTANT HOCKEY GAME OF SEASON IS BILLED TONIGHT

By CHARLES E. PARKER.

A hockey game of considerable importance is scheduled for the Boston Arena tonight.

The Westminster Hockey Club will meet the B. A. A. on this occasion and the winner may be crowned Eastern champion and awarded opportunity to battle the Near-West and Mid-West division winners for the national title.

The word "may" is used advisedly, for this has been distinctly an "in and out" season in the popular ice sport, and tonight's opponents are two of the "inest and outest" teams ever to perform locally.

They take turns in looking like a million dollars and changing their appearance to that of a plugged nickel. No later than last Saturday did the Westminsters assume the latter make up, bowing on that occasion to the Quaker City Club, tailender in the division and defeated by nearly every club it has faced this season.

And the B. A. A. has had its spells of unimpressiveness. Consequently it is possible that tonight's winner may lose its final Eastern division contest on Saturday and the two teams against become tied for the sectional custom title, thereby requiring another meeting between them to really decide who's who.

• • •

The Waiters," as the Westminsters are called, rule the favorite in the wagering, but, as favorites have been very prone to defeat, this year, this may mean the Unicorn's chances are rosy-hued.

Several factors serve as the guide to wagerers in placing their coin on the "Waiters." First off, the "Waiters" trounced the B. A. A. in their previous league meeting; again Dave Ingalls, captain of the Unicorns and the best wingman on the team, will be unable to play owing to a recent operation; still again Joe Stubbs, the most experienced defence player on the B. A. A. team, has but recently recovered from a busted collar bone, and probably will be unable to stand the rough wear and tear that men playing such positions are forced to encounter, particularly when facing the Westminsters.

But the B. A. A. despite its crippled condition and its defeat by the "Waiters" is in a much better position than was the Quaker City Club last week and the Quaker City Club tipped the "Waiters" to the tune of 4 to 3

• • •

No matter what the condition of the teams or their respective chances of victory, however, hockey fandom will turn out in crowding numbers for this holiday evening sets, and that the Arena will be taxed to capacity and then some is the confident expectation of Manager George Linvell Brown, and others, to whom the packing of the rink is exceedingly pleasing.

• • •

That the game will develop spirited play and by play is also a sure thing. The makeup of the teams brings on international rivalry to the contest, for while the Unicorns all are local products, the "Waiters," except for Frankie Downing and Irving Small, all hail from Canada.

To add to the source of spirited play there are certain personal grudges which have developed this season or over a period of years. Then, capping the lot is the stakes for which they play, and, the firm opinion of members of each team that their respective outfit is the best

Thus it is that those who fill the local ice palace tonight are destined to receive a full allotment of thrills and, perhaps, witness one of the greatest hockey games ever played on Boston ice

YOUNG ZBYSZKO WINS FROM STECKER

New York, N. Y., Feb. 22 — Wladek Zbyszko beat Joe Stecker in two out of three falls in Madison Square Garden last night by the way of "rough" falls and Ed Wellman will be hold as a lion if he again tries to lure the wrestling fans to the big amphitheatre, unless the "rolling" fall rule is rescinded.

Zbyszko did not know that he had won on the third fall. Nobody else did, except the referee and he, of course has the last word.

That is the last word on the result. The crowd had many last words — mostly jeers and boos, but others so expressive as to leave no doubt as to their feelings of disgust and dissatisfaction.

Stecker earned the second with a body hold in 19 minutes. The white Zbyszko took the third fall with what might be called a flying tackle in 6 minutes 40 seconds. Zbyszko weighed 227 pounds to 220 for Stecker, and both looked in perfect condition as they fought each other their fifth bout of best two out of three falls.

In one of the other matches, Strangler Lewis was too troublesome for Cliff Binkley of Ohio, and beat the last named in straight falls. The first took nine minutes, and the second twenty-eight minutes and twenty seconds. Lewis weighed 235, while Binkley tipped the beam at 215.

CALZA HAS HARD MAT TASK ON HIS HANDS

A top wrestling card has been arranged at the Grand Opera House by the management for tomorrow night, and it will serve to bring George Calza, the Italian heavyweight, against two men.

He will tackle Annibale Rizzo, the well known local heavyweight, and after a brief rest will grapple with Ilikoff, known as the Russian Bon.

John Kilonis will meet Peter Goulette, and this promises to be a rough match, as both men have a grudge to settle and they will try to make a fall in quick time.

The other big bout of the night will introduce Harry Mamas, the rough-house Greek, against Paul Bowser, the Boston favorite.

This is without doubt one of the strongest cards arranged this season, and the advance sale indicates a big night. The downtown ticket office is at the Howard.

CARL MAYS DENIES THAT HE HAS LONG CONTRACT

Hot Springs, Ark., Feb. 22.—Wallie Schang, regular Yankee catcher, and Carl Mays, famous "submarine" hurler of the same club, joined the squad of Yankees and Giants in preliminary training here.

Neither Mays nor Schang has signed a contract, and Mays denies that he is bound by a three-year document. Both players said they expected to reach a salary agreement with club officials at New Orleans when the regular Spring training grind begins.

Now that Schang and Mays have reported there are five Yankees in camp, McNally, Scott, and Devormer being the others, against three Giants. Waite Hoyt of the Yankees is expected today and it is thought that Bob Shawkey will show up by Thursday.

HARVARD BASKETBALL TEAM BEATS R. I. STATE

Harvard's slightly superior team work although playing without three regulars, and the artful foul shooting of McLeish won a 44 to 32 basketball victory over Rhode Island State in Hemenway gymnasium.

The Crimson captain had his peering eye in shape, shooting fourteen out of seventeen tries after fouls, and he was afforded valuable assistance by Lowenthal, scoring eight times from the floor.

Says One Kid Ate So Many Animal Crackers He Thought That Barnum and Bailey Were Bakers

Menageries are wonderful things, but the nearest some kids ever get to seeing a zoo is when their parents bring them a box of animal crackers.

One woman was so careful of her little boy that when she brought him a box of these crackers she took the lions out of it.

This woman was so dumb she thought that Barnum and Bailey were bakers.

She was a staunch lover of animals and bought all of her crackers from Ringling Brothers.

She had read a lot about the Chicago Cubs and one day she went out to the Bronx Zoo to see them.

Another woman was so afraid of dogs and cats that the only pets she ever had were animal crackers.

And even then she wouldn't let the children play with them unless their father was around.

One man said his little boy was going to be a wonderful circus trainer because he could put three animal crackers in his mouth at once.

The kid ate two lions and an elephant, but he choked on a hippopotamus.

The child wanted to see the jungles, so his father took him down to the bakery where they made them.

The kid hadn't been there twenty minutes when he became so fearless that he went right over and stole three tigers and a leopard.

He got so wild that he ate four hyenas raw.

Hunting was a great sport to him and he was a great shot in any bakery.

He could bag a lion any time the baker wasn't looking.

He ate so many animal crackers that he couldn't touch meat for three weeks afterward.

He became so wild from eating these animal crackers that he went right home and kicked his mother's Pomeranian dog off the sofa.

He got so tough that he'd take a lion in one hand, a tiger in the other and—zowie—cracker crumbs.

Some boys are great hunters. And who knows but what they get their training from fighting animal crackers?

CHAMPION IS READY TO FIGHT IN AN OUTDOOR SHOW IN BOSTON

By JACK DEMPSEY

Heavyweight Champion of the World.

I now know how to sympathize with George MacManus, Tad and the other Boston American stars who are obliged to get a new idea each day for a feature. I frankly confess it is much easier to step into a ring and knock out some big, husky fellow than it is to unearth a brand new story each day.

I was seated at my writing table at the Boston hotel where I am stopping, while Jack Kearns and my brother, Johnny, were having some amusement in giving a takeoff of my theatrical act. Damon Runyon of the New York American was also present and suggested that I tell the readers of the Boston American of the north ada employed by chorus girls in their frantic efforts to sting me for heavy financial losses.

I'll them about Bebe Daniels," said Kearns. The fellow is part of my engagement has become a joke with my party. They now use it as a goal getter.

• • •

Jack Conway of the Boston American then breezed into the room. He hinted that the Sporting Edition was getting anxious about my copy.

Conway interrupted Kearns' amusement by asking if he would agree to let me fight at an open air show in Boston if a suitable opponent could be secured.

Just as Kearns was about to tell our plans to Conway, I decided this would make a good topic for my daily story. So I play fully knocked Kearns for a goal and told the Boston American boxing expert that I had first claim on this yarn.

• • •

I am ready to fight in Boston any time a promoter offers me the proper inducements. I will sign to battle Willis, Brennan, Willard or any other man in this city if I am paid enough money for my services and provided a legitimate promoter desires to stage such a match.

It is tiresome to keep reading about offers for bouts made by promoters who have no rating in the world of sport. Kearns and myself, though are always ready to talk business with anybody who possesses the ability to stage a big match and who has the necessary financial backing.

• • •

After I complete my engagement at the old Howard I am going to New York where I will give the sketch. When my New York engagement ends, I may, I will be ordered to train for my match with Georges Carpentier. This is the little affair at Jersey City, a number of the Frenchman's intimate friends have recently claimed that Carpentier possesses enough skill to defeat me. They have argued that he should have finished me in the second round of our tussle at Jersey City.

• • •

I have not the least doubt about my ability to knock Carpentier out any time we meet. Therefore if I go to Europe, I shall welcome a return meeting with the gallant Frenchman. And if the bout is staged, I don't think the fans will have to wait four rounds to see the knockout go over.

Jack Kearns has been pulling some of his brightest lines as I have been writing. Maybe I shall give you some of them in some of my other articles which I shall prepare for the Boston American.

A Delightfully Refreshing Story of Love and a Woman's Way With a Man

THE STORY SO FAR

James Edgerton, ad, of an old and aristocratic New York family, returns to New York from abroad on hearing that the firm founded by his forebears has failed. He pays dollar for dollar and finds himself left with an inherited apartment luxuriously furnished, which an iron-clad will has entailed. With two dollars in his pockets he refuses the offer of an old-time friend to help, goes to the apartment, and finds it occupied by two charming young women, distant cousins, who beg him to forgive them for being there. They are as poor as he is and have advertised for a position, using the apartment as their headquarters. They ask him to let them stay until they get employ-

SILVETTE caressing her braid with deft fingers, mused aloud: "It's very noble of him to claim relationship with two poverty-stricken old maids from the Pacific coast. Don't you thing so, Diana?" And she glanced up with a bewitching smile that had in it a glint of malice.

"Stop tormenting him!" repeated Diana. "We're pretty and young, and he knows it and we know it. What's the use in speculating about what he might have done if we were not attractive? He's perfectly satisfied with his Western cousins—aren't you?" glancing up.

"Perfectly," he said.

Diana nodded emphatically.

"Do you hear, Silvie? He says he is perfectly satisfied with us, and he is a typical New Yorker. Therefore, we need not be at all disturbed about our qualifications for entertaining anybody; if somebody will only offer us employment."

Silvette looked around at him. "I'd like to have you see us in our afternoon gowns; I believe you'd really be rather proud of the relationship."

"Good Lord!" he exclaimed, half laughing, half annoyed; "I'm proud of it anyway. What on earth do you think a New Yorker is?"

"We've seen some," said Diana meaningly. "Several came here in answer to our advertisement. But we knew, of course, that your type existed, too."

"Have you been—annoyed?"

Silvette laughed. "One man, of very red complexion, inquired if Diana would act as his housekeeper. He had several country places, he said."

"There was a woman came! we didn't care for her," added Diana thoughtfully. Then, lifting her head, she looked at Edgerton with a coo so pure and sweet, so exquisitely candid that he felt his heart stop for a moment. Then the blood mounted to his face—to the roots of his hair.

"Take me into your partnership," he said impulsively; "will you?"

"Why!"

"Can you? Is it all right?"

"I don't know what you mean!" said Diana.

"Why couldn't I help entertain week-ends with you?"

The proposition seemed to astound them all, even the young fellow who had made it.

For a moment they all stood silent; then, pursuing his own impulsive idea toward a plausible conclusion, he said: "Why not, after all? It would make a better combination than two young girls alone. I've clothes—two trunks in the hall, two more at the customs—London made and duty paid! . . . Why not? It's a good combination. The more I think of it the better I like it!"

He began to pace to and fro nervously.

"I know a lot of people—the right kind. I'm not ashamed to ask them to employ me. There is no reason why a fortnight or so in Edgerton should not be in their houses—"

"But," said Silvette quietly, "the right sort of people, as you call them, have no need of asking anybody to aid them in entertaining. It is very generous of you, Mr. Edgerton, but don't you see that services of our kind will be accepted only by—by newcomers, newly wealthy people—those whose circle is small and not very select."

"Yes, that is so," he said, so fervently that Diana watched him curiously, and a delicate color came into her cheeks as he looked up again, eager, radiant.

"That's true," he repeated; "but it I can't do anything in that way for us among the right sort, at least the other kind will have a man to reckon with"—he glanced at Diana grimly now—"when they inquire about housekeepers, and when women whom you do not care for reply to your advertisements."

"That is rather a nice thing to say," observed Silvette, looking at him out of her dark eyes. "But we know—a number of things. We are not a bit afraid, and—you would not care to—endure the kind of people likely to employ us."

"I can endure what you can. I'd like to do it. . . . Would you rather not have me?"

"Why, I—it would be delightful—charming—but we had not even dreamed of such a thing."

He turned to Diana. "Will you let me try?"

She said, confused: "I hadn't thought of such a thing. . . . Could it be done?"

"Why not?" asked Silvette, immensely interested. "When people come, we can say, 'We and our cousin, Mr. Edgerton, are associated as social entertainers.'"

"Oh, if you put it that way they'll think he does Punch and Judy and we dance queer dances!" exclaimed Diana in consternation.

Edgerton threw back his head and laughed, utterly unable to control his merriment, and Silvette caught the infection, and her clear, delicious laughter filled the sunny studio. She showed her white teeth when she laughed.

"Oh, it is perfectly horrid of me to think of such a thing, but I can't help thinking of three trained acrobats," said Silvette, breathless. "Does it seem funny for three of us to be associated in entertaining guests? Does it, Mr. Edgerton? Or am I only frivolous?"

After their laughter had ceased and their breath returned, he said: "Wherever we go—whoever employs us—the other guests will suppose us to be guests, too. Only the fully millionaire from outer darkness with a new house on Fifth avenue and a newer one in the country will know."

Silvette said: "Do you realize that it is perfectly dear of you to propose such a thing?"

Diana said nothing.

Silvette went on: "I know perfectly well—and you know, too—that your name would be worth almost anything to the wealthy snob who employs us."

Diana said nothing.

"To have an Edgerton as a guest would elevate our prospective employer to the seventh heaven of snobbery," said Silvette. "Diana and I would shine serenely in the reflected relationship."

"Don't make fun of me," he said. "Why, I'm not. I really mean it. My instincts have been so warped and materialized and commercialized that here I am seriously proposing to make family capital out of the name of one branch of the family. I really do mean it, Mr. Edgerton."

"No," said Diana quietly.

He turned toward her.

"Do you vote against me?"

"Yes."

"Don't please," he said, looking at her.

"Do you think it a decent thing to do?" she asked; "our making plans to vote on Mr. Edgerton?"

"Good heavens!" he said impatiently, "my being part of a family to—to—why, it isn't going to alter your success in any way."

"Your name makes it sure."

"Your youth and beauty and good breeding make it sure. My name has nothing to do wit hit."

"Then why do you propose it?"

He laughed. "Because I've got to make a living, too."

"There are less humiliating ways of making a living—for you," said Diana steadily.

He looked first at Silvette, then at her, deliberately, and his face altered.

"I want to look out for you," he said, "and that's the plain truth."

"That," observed Silvette, "is the nicest th' g he's said yet, Diana." She walked up to him and stood serenely inspecting him.

"I vote for you. Diane let's admit him. W'e're a poverty-stricken family, and we ought to combine, besides, I Like him to feel the way he does about us—not that it's necessary, of course—but it's—pleasant."

"I haven't any cash," said Edgerton, "but I've this apartment, which nobody can take away even if I starve; and I've some very fine clothes. . . . Won't you vote for me, Diana?" he added so naturally that neither seemed to notice his use of her first name.

Silvette waited a moment, watching her sister; then she said briskly: "Let's dress. We'll inspect your beautiful British clothing, cousin, and you shall see our prettiest afternoon gowns. Then we can tell better how such a combination would look. Shall we?"

Edgerton said to Diana: "Don't you want me?"

She replied slowly: "I—don't—know," looked up at him, straight at him, thoughtfully.

"People may come at any time after 3 o'clock," said Silvette. "If they find you in flowered silk and a butterfly sash and me in a pigtail, they will certainly expect dances from us and probably Punch and Judy from our cousin."

She laughed and extended her hand to Edgerton.

"I like you, cousin; Diana does, too. When you're dressed in your best, come back to the studio and we'll arrive at some kind of a conclusion."

Diana nodded to him as she passed with her sister. The questioning gravity of her expression reminded him of a child who has not yet made up its mind to like you. She wore the bluest eyes he had ever seen and the most enchanting mouth—the unspoiled mouth of childhood.

CHURCH MISSIONARY'S STORY

By W. A. McKeever

TWENTY-SIX months ago a bright young man of the Middle West suddenly quit the comforts of a good home and the pleasures of a college career to go into the timber district of Oregon as a church missionary.

Now, here is a superb specimen of manhood at feet one, built to match the height, perfect in health and buoyant in spirit. And the puzzling question for you and me, my boy, is to understand why this sturdy youth of nineteen years should have chosen to leave father and mother and college chums and resign himself to the life of a humble missionary. Without purse or scrip, and often for days with no friendly voice at our door, he journeyed on, delivering tracts, admonishing the unrepentant and preaching the gospel according to his belief.

Denied Food

Frequently our young missionary was denied food or shelter. At times he had to go for a day without a meal. And not infrequently he was compelled to make his bed of moss and leaves under some friendly cedar tree. Then, occasionally, he would be found assisting with some kind of common labor, but always with the thought of service rather than wages. But the singular fact is he went on undaunted, singing and giving thanks to God.

It is not my purpose to explain this strange behavior to you, my boy, but simply to describe it, true to fact and let you think the matter through for yourself. I will not suffice here for you to exclaim "crazy" or "foolish." As already stated this young religious messenger is perfectly sane and balanced in all respects. He is well dressed, refined, in manners, and choice language. Looks the part as a college student and has a spiritual light in his eye which cannot be mistaken. No disciplined youth can possibly present such a radiant countenance.

"It has been the happiest period of my life. The privations were often hard, but they seemed to do me good. The rebuken of unfriendly people were at first difficult to bear, but finally they became a means of helpful chastening."

Thus the strange young religious worker has replied substantially to my questioning. Also he reports the conversion of a considerable number of unbelievers and the establishment of several small but active church units. Thus, having gone out empty-handed, he returns today with a "harvest of souls."

Asked to Think

Finally, my boy, I simply ask you to "think of these things." Perhaps you believe that the real pleasures of life consist of eating and drinking, sleeping and having a good time—in mere indulgence of your senses or your animal nature. But here is a red blooded youth who turns his back on all these pleasures for a considerable short lived, while he sets his face like flint against every storm of difficulty and privation. What does he mean and what is that "exceeding great glory" which he claims to derive from it all?

Think it over, my boy. It may be that there is a hidden avenue of your own being which has never yet been consciously entered by some yourself. It might be that if you could once enter this it would prove to be "the secret place of the Most High." By piea in time you will leave nothing undone to explore every way that might possibly lead to a higher recess within your own life.

Barber Gives Recipe for Gray Hair

Mr. A. E. O'Brien, who has been a barber in New York City for many years, made the following statement: "Gray, streaked or faded hair can be immediately made black, brown or light brown, whichever shade you desire, by the use of the following remedy that you can make at home:

"Merely get a box of Orlex powder at any drug store. It costs very little and no extras to buy. Dissolve it in 2 oz. of distilled or rain water and comb it through the hair. Full directions for use and a gold band guarantee come in each box. One box will last you for months.

"It is safe, does not rub off, is not sticky or gummy and leaves the hair fluffy. It will make a gray-haired person look twenty years younger."—Advertisement.

Rich Girl, Poor Girl—A Fine New Serial

By Virginia Terhune Van de Water

(Copyright, 1922, by Star Company.)

THE Sunday for which the trip to Westchester was planned dawned cold and gray. At noon the snow began to fall, and the wind rose.

Mrs. Hollingshead was not at table this Sunday. She was feeling so weary that she preferred to keep her room and have her attendant bring her dinner to her when the family had finished theirs.

"Yes, the weather is rather nasty," Richard replied to his father's comment. "Not a very nice afternoon in which to go out of town. But I promised some friends up in Westchester that I would dine with them. If I stay at all night, Dad, do not worry about me."

"I never lie awake ' learn when you come in," the parent said, placidly. "I let my mind be the worrying about you. A man can take care of himself. I was wondering," turning to Adelaide, "if this be your afternoon to go home? If so, you must let me send you across town in a taxi."

Putting It Up to Her

Adelaide hesitated. "I do not think I shall go home; at least, if I do, I shall return before dark," she stammered.

Henry Hollingshead looked at his daughter. "How about it, Patty?" he asked. "Is this Miss Brown's Sunday off?"

"You heard what she said about it," Patricia replied. "She can go if she wants to."

"You are to be at home, then, are you?" the father asked.

"No. I have an engagement to take dinner with a friend," Patricia informed him.

"How are you going?"

"With Mr. Forsythe—in an automobile."

"I did not know he owned one," her father observed. "What time do you start?"

"Late in the afternoon."

"Are you sure this will not interfere with Miss Brown's plans?"

"Will it, Addie?" Patricia asked. Adelaide winced at the question. It was unkind of Patricia, for whom she was sacrificing her own outing, to throw upon her the responsibility of deceiving Henry Hollingshead.

She glanced across at the rich girl who was smiling unconcernedly, as if amused at the predicament of the attendant.

"I have decided not to stay out to supper even if I do go home," Adelaide said. "Perhaps Miss Patricia could sit with Mrs. Hollingshead while I run over home for an hour or two. I will return by 6 o'clock."

"I had hoped to rest this afternoon," she said coldly. "I was out last night and am very tired. But, of course, if mother's attendant cannot give up her plans, I must give up mine."

The Father Is Angry

"You are right, son!" Mr. Hollingshead's tone was authoritative. "Miss Brown is always the last person in this house to have consideration shown her. She gives up her preferences in every case. It is not fair."

Patricia spoke sharply. "Well, unless I am mistaken, that is what she is here for, isn't it? I was under the impression that when she and I talked over this situation we arranged that she was to take my place with mother whenever I happened to be away. I also understood that she was considered in the salary."

"Patricia!" the father's voice was harsh and stern. "You are forgetting yourself!"

Pushed Back Her Chair

"Mr. Hollingshead," she said, her voice low and clear, "as I have finished my dessert, you may excuse me so that I can get Mrs. Hollingshead's tray ready? She will be wanting her dinner."

"Won't you have some coffee before you go?" Henry Hollingshead asked.

"No, I thank you, I do not care for any," the gentle tones replied. A moment later she had left the room and was in the butler's pantry helping Estelle arrange the invalid's tray. She was very angry, so angry that she did not let herself stop to think. She dare not.

She did not pass through the dining-room on her way to the sick woman's room, but went by the back stairway. While she cut Mrs. Hollingshead's meat her thoughts were busy.

If she could only get away from this place! Of course, she was thankful to have such a good position—but she resented the attitude of the daughter of the house. She, Adelaide, had pretended that she did not care to spend this evening at home, when really she longed to.

YOUR FAULTS AS ASSETS

REALIZING FROM FAILURES

By Beatrice Fairfax

PRACTICALLY all of us recognize the importance of making the most of our good points, but at the same time we sigh regretfully as we contemplate the handicapping faults which threaten our success.

There's nothing which works us more evil than jealousy. The jealous man or woman goes through life handicapped by mental astigmatism. Actually, jealous folks are cross-eyed in a fashion that no muscular difficulty with the eyes can bring about.

To be jealous of fellow workers means having your eye on them rather than on the job. Opportunity may be waiting, but how can anyone see opportunity when he is giving most of his warped mind and all of his sore heart to watching someone else instead of keeping his own work in the center?

"Jealous," according to the dictionary, means "apprehensive or suspicious of being outdone by a rival in mates of affection or favor."

But—

And—

Now, "passionate ardor for a cause" is a magnificent thing. It means hard struggle and a spiritual effort to attain a fine though ever so distant goal. And since "zeal" comes from the same root derivation whence "jealous" springs, why can't we recognize their relation and make something practical of it?

One who finds himself in the throes of shyness may easily enough discover that he is afraid to meet folks because he feels inferior to them. Then the thing must be worked out in terms of making good so the "inferiority complex" may go.

One who is always touchy and sarcastic is likely to be using the weapon which he fears may be turned against him. He is on guard against having sensitive feelings hurt, so he says the bitter things which he dreads to have said to him were he to let his sensitiveness appear.

A Stubborn Cough Loosens Right Up

Here is a home-made syrup which millions of people have found to be the most dependable means of breaking up stubborn coughs. It is cheap and simple, but very prompt in action. Under its healing, soothing influence, chest soreness goes, phlegm loosens, breathing becomes easier, tickling in throat stops and you get right to sleep. Real sleep. The usual throat and chest colds are conquered by it in 24 hours or less. Nothing better for bronchitis, hoarseness, croup, throat tickle, bronchial asthma or winter coughs.

To make this splendid cough syrup, pour 2½ ounces of Pinex into a pint bottle and fill with sugar syrup and granulated sugar syrup and shake thoroughly. If you prefer use strained molasses, honey, or corn syrup, instead of sugar syrup. Either way, you have a full pint—a family supply—of much better cough syrup than you could buy ready made for three times the money. Keeps perfectly and children love its pleasant taste. You can feel it start to loosen and the concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, known the world over for its prompt healing effect upon the membranes.

To avoid disappointment ask your druggist for "2½ ounces of Pinex" with full directions, and don't accept anything else. Guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction or money promptly refunded. The Pinex Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.—Advertisement.

Boston Woman Was Often Too Weak to Walk Across the Floor Before She Got Taniac

Tortures of Stomach Trouble Quickly Ended.

"It was a lucky day for me when I bought my first bottle of Taniac and never in my life have I seen as big a change in anybody as this medicine has made in me," said Mrs. Mary C. Bolton, 115 Lenox St., Boston, Mass.

"For eleven years I went through the tortures that nobody knows who has not had a bad case of stomach trouble. My appetite was so poor I could hardly eat anything and I suffered so much distress no matter how careful I was about my diet that I was actually afraid to eat. My nerves finally gave way and I was growing thinner and weaker every day. Indeed, many days I was so weak I couldn't even walk across the floor.

"I was discouraged and miserable when I took my first dose of Taniac, but today I am strong and well and feeling healthier, happier and younger than in years."

Holidays Rightly Spent Add to Every Man's Working Ability, Says Forbes

Holidays, like most things in life, are good when taken in moderation. As with money, holidays are unevenly distributed among the people. Some rich men become so obsessed chasing work that they neglected seeking health. In certain industries there are far too many enforced "holidays," while in other industries holidays are altogether too few.

One good thing about an occasional holiday is that it gives human beings an opportunity to think. The daily grind, the daily round, leaves most men and women little time or inclination for calm reflection, for pondering what it is all about. The leisure of a holiday affords many people a chance to turn their thoughts away from their regular rut.

• • •

Also, of course, holidays bring time for recreation. Recreation is essential to the full development of our faculties. Every normal human being aspires to attain success in one direction or in another. The more I study the careers of men who have achieved more than ordinary, the more I become impressed with the importance of obtaining a rational amount of recreation. The dynamic executive needs recreation just as much as the humble toiler needs it, and the latter needs it just as much as the former. There would be less social discontent and more and better work would be done were a reasonable measure of recreation infused into the lives of all workers. There would be fewer untimely deaths among our Napoleons of finance and industry were the indispensability of rational recreation recognized.

• • •

"The man who works fifty-two weeks in the year does not do his best in any one week of the year," Daniel Guggenheim, head of the best-known smelting and mining family in the world, impressed upon me

"Some people think I was a slave to work all my business life. The trouble is," said John D. Rockefeller, with a twinkle, "I was a bit of what would now be called a 'slacker' after I reached the middle thirties."

Coleman Du Pont, who before becoming a Senator, thought nothing of buying a Waldorf Astoria before breakfast, securing control of an industrial plant by lunch time, and becoming a dominating factor in a financial organization before nightfall, entered in whole-hearted sport and other forms of recreation.

• • •

The man who fills the biggest business industrial job in the world, E. H. Gary, head of the two billion dollar Steel Corporation, often relaxes. So did Theodore N. Vail, whose achievements in the telephone field constitute one of the most remarkable monuments ever raised by one man. Gary is seventy-four, while Vail lived well beyond the allotted span of three score years and ten.

E. H. Harriman, on the other hand, never played, and he died from overwork at sixty-one. James J. Hill was wiser. He spent almost an evening singing the good old psalms of David or listening to the violin, on which he was an authority. His other recreations were manifold; and he lived to be seventy-eight.

Too many of us, especially when young, confound recreation with dissipation. Real recreation quickens aspiration. The true purpose of recreation is not merely to amuse, not merely to afford us pleasure, not merely to "kill time," but to increase our fitness, enhance our usefulness, spur achievement. Any form of recreation that impairs either our physical or mental efficiency does not recreate.

• • •

Britain made what was regarded as an amazing discovery after she had been feverishly waging war for more than a year. Early in the struggle the fiat went forth that factories, shipyards, munition plants and every other vital industry must work seven days a week, and that every man and woman must labor twelve or more hours every day. Output fell alarmingly, yet the bosses were driving their forces to the limit, the wheels were kept going long into the night, no vacations were granted. The government finally ordered an investigation by an eminent body of physicians, employers and psychologists. They found that where the longest hours were worked the results were the poorest. The whole system of "all work and no play" was immediately abandoned. Theatres, many of which had been closed, were reopened; football, golf and cricket, which had been tabooed, were revived; social life, which had been frowned upon, was restored.

• • •

When Henry Ford reduced working hours in his plant from ten to eight per day, production not only did not fall off, but increased phenomenally. George M. Reynolds, head of the largest bank in Chicago, insists upon every one of his officers taking a full day off every week in addition to Sunday.

"The pace is so rapid and the pressure so great that a man cannot stand up against it and do the best for either the institution or himself if he works more than five days a week," Mr. Reynolds explained to me. Edison won't employ as an officer any man who plays golf or who has any other hobby, but Edison, being a genius, has eccentric notions.

• • •

How we spend our non-working hours determines very largely how capably or incapably we spend our working hours. Do your evenings, do your Saturday afternoons, do your Sundays, do your vacations add to your mental and physical equipment for the battle of life? Do you make your play pay? Are you at your best on Monday morning? Or, after a respite from duty, do you return a trifle seedy?

While success ostensibly is won during working hours, in reality it is most often won during non-business hours, the hours that are spent away from the bench or the office, the hours during which we are our own masters; the hours we are at liberty to use or misuse.

SALESMANSHIP DECLARED IN BAD SHAPE

Will Not Be Sound Until Drawing Account Is Abolished, Spillane Learns

By RICHARD SPILLANE.

Philadelphia, Feb. 22.—Salesmanship, may be the head of a large sales organization, will not be placed on a sound basis in this country until the drawing account is abolished.

"If I had at my command the drawing account has cost me," he adds, "I could start a bank. The system is wrong. Why should I finance a salesman any more than a manufacturer should finance a piece worker in his factory. It has been made manifest in the last year that the number of salesmen is small in comparison with the number of persons who pose as salesmen.

"Anyone can sell stuff when the public is eager to buy and distributors are scrambling for goods, but it takes real salesmanship to effect sales when the public is coy about buying and the merchants are doubtful about the market.

WHAT SALESMAN NEEDS.

"Confidence and conversation will not sell goods. You need something more. You need knowledge of your business and faith in the articles you have to sell.

"I have no end of applications from salesmen. They are chock full of enthusiasm. They're sure they can sell the stuff. They only ask a chance to demonstrate their ability. I must say they talk well.

"Everything looks good until they spring the question as to what drawing account they are to have. When I tell them I'm off this drawing account business they grow suddenly cold. No drawing account? Why, how are they to live?

"I used to 'fall' for that, but not now. I've allowed drawing accounts. I've almost wrecked business. Look at this list.

"Here's one case. Three months' drawing account $50 a week and the gentleman didn't bring in orders averaging $10 a week. Here's another, a bird who didn't do a thing in a month but draw his pay. Here's another. I've got stacks of them, some good, some fair and many of them bad.

KNOWS LITTLE OF THRIFT.

"My observation is that the average salesman knows little of thrift. He assumes that he has selling ability, but will willing to prove it except at your expense.

"When you give a drawing account to many of them they go out blithely and confidently, but when they don't produce and you ask them why, they tell you business is dead. Now you knew that before you started.

"What angers me is the attitude of the so-called salesman looking for a job. You may question his ability and he will flush up and tell you he can sell anything that ever was made, but when you tell him if that is so there is no reason why he should have a drawing account he'll tell you he is not interested and when he says it you know he considers issues. Several are already in existence, but they have been doing but little pending leadership.

MORE SENECA STOCK.

Application of the Seneca Copper Ho lin: 100,000 additional shares of stock on the New York Stock Exchange is hardly dry when it is rumored that the company proposes to issue some more shares, proceeds of which will be used for further development. This would account for the recent sharp break in the quoted market price.

The 100,000 new shares which are to be listed at this time is understood to have been sold under cover of the rise from about 15 to 25 during the life of the Lewisohn-Livermore syndicate agreement. The new issue of Seneca, now rumored, is estimated to be 150,000 shares.

Incidentally the ghost of the Lewisohn-Livermore syndicate agreement may appear in the corridors of the Stock Exchange when the application to listing the new stock comes up for formal consideration. Certain people affiliated with the Stock Exchange entertain doubts as to whether a block of stock on which there is an option outstanding could be listed in due fairness to the public.

BURRELL A. C. GIVES PARTY IN ROXBURY

The Burrell A. C. of Roxbury gave its annual Washington Birthday party at its clubhouse and it was as successful as the athletic teams of the club has produced. Guests were entertained by a six-piece orchestra. Miss Hoyle of the Y. D. orchestra played the piano. David Goldberg, A. E. F. entertainer, also gave selections on the piano. Ballads by Michael Mahoney of Roxbury received a great hand. Bud Currie of Roxbury pleased the crowd by his dancing.

BRITISH ELECTION TO BE PRESS AGENTS' WAR

London, Feb. 22.—The next election in Great Britain promises to mainly be a battle between press agents. The press department of the coalition forces is working on "stunts" although no date has been set for the election. New phrases worked out by press agents are making their appearance, such as "Red Rain" as a term of reproach for extremists and "The Man Who Won the Peace" as a description of Premier Lloyd George.

To Be Paid $6 a Day Because He Refused to Sue Ford

Napoleon, O., Feb. 23.—Because he refused to sue the Detroit, Toledo & Ironton railroad, or to suggest a settlement for injuries received last October, William Piso has been rewarded by Henry Ford, owner of the road.

Piso was crushed and bruised in a crossing accident while employed by the railroad. Ford ordered him taken to a hospital where he remained until he recovered.

Fords' representatives then made a proposition to pay all Piso's expenses while he was disabled, allow him full pay with a bonus and give him a life job as crossing watchman here. Piso accepted.

He begins his new duties March 15, at a salary of $6 per day for an eight hour day with Sunday off.

MILLION SHARES EXCHANGED IN BULL MARKET

Steel Common Leads, Making Net Gain of More Than Three Points

By BROADAN WALL.

Registered U. S. Patent Office, 1922.

New York, Feb. 22.—Under the leadership of Steel common, which made a net gain of more than three points and touched a new top for this movement, the stock market showed pronounced strength all day Tuesday. Several new high records were made in the industrial department.

Higher prices induced increased speculation so that the turnover for the full session approximated 1,000,000 shares or the heaviest in many weeks.

There was no special reason for the sudden revival of bullishness except increased activities on the part of the many pools which are operating in the industrial department.

RAILS MOVE FORWARD.

Constructive operations are spreading in the railroad department, which promises to give a good account of itself shortly. Rock Island and Canadian Pacific were at the front with sharp advances to new prices for the movement.

Distinct evidence of an impending movement upward in transportation shares is shown by the formation of a pool in one of the low-priced but popular railroad shares to work on the constructive side. This group will accumulate 150,000 shares of stock. Its members consist of some of the ablest operators and bosses in the Street.

Its formation will undoubtedly encourage the formation of other pools in transportation issues. Several are already in existence, but they have been doing but little pending leadership.

MORE SENECA STOCK.

Application of the Seneca Copper to list 100,000 additional shares of stock on the New York Stock Exchange is hardly dry when it is rumored that the company proposes to issue some more shares, proceeds of which will be used for further development. This would account for the recent sharp break in the quoted market price.

The 100,000 new shares which are to be listed at this time is understood to have been sold under cover of the rise from about 15 to 25 during the life of the Lewisohn-Livermore syndicate agreement. The new issue of Seneca, now rumored, is estimated to be 150,000 shares.

Incidentally the ghost of the Lewisohn-Livermore syndicate agreement may appear in the corridors of the Stock Exchange when the application to listing the new stock comes up for formal consideration. Certain people affiliated with the Stock Exchange entertain doubts as to whether a block of stock on which there is an option outstanding could be listed in due fairness to the public.

EUROPE IS NOT EXPECTED TO PAY DEBTS

Evans Says Chicago Financiers Have About Given Up Hope of Settlement

By C. J. EVANS.

Chicago, Feb. 22.—The United States is having its troubles in getting rid of the Eastern Hemisphere although it could be done easily by saying "go, and sin no more." To us the Eastern Hemisphere means debt backed by war and preparations for war, whatever it may have meant to us in the past, and of course that was a great deal on the side of things good.

The principal obstacle to satisfactory relations at the moment arises from the lingering hope that the debts of European governments to our government would be paid. Some of the newspapers are printing a statement by Louis P. Loucheur, formerly a member of the French Cabinet, that "we never will be able to pay a sou to America." It was not necessary to get that statement by cable, for the same thing had been said by authoritative Frenchmen privately in this country recently and in the past.

NOTHING IS EXPECTED.

Thoughtful financiers in this city are thoroughly convinced that nothing is to be expected from France or any other continental nation indebted to us. Some of them will refuse to execute the formal contract embodied in the proposed refunding act, simply because they do not wis to commit themselves to an agreement which they know they cannot carry out. This had been stated plainly by men who know.

Great Britain will go through the motions and with an honest intention to carry out the plan, knowing, however, that ultimate payment of her debt will be made in merchandise, for it can be made in no other way. One might see in this the closing of Eastern fabric mills and many other factories.

If our tariff was so high as to make it unprofitable to sell goods in this country, of course Great Britain would have recourse to other countries to which we would be glad to sell. Thus we would have a competition compared with which former rivalries in trade would be small.

To recall that millions of persons are employed in these industries of ours is to say what effect this would have on wages in the United States. The motive on the part of Great Britain would be compelling, for the people of that country would starve but for the poor? trade.

GREAT BRITAIN'S TROUBLES.

Great Britain is perhaps as likely to fall in collecting any of debts due her from other countries than the United States, though she has better facilities for holding a menace over the heads of debtors.

It is interesting to see the beautiful calm with which these continental nations regard their indebtedness to us. It is the calm of certainty; nothing doubtful in this matter at all.

"Let the United States do the talking," one can hear the citizens of these countries whisper to one another. Largely to this attitude and to the hopelessness of currency indebtedness of several European countries is due the nonchalance with which gold is released to come to the United States. There could be embargoes to prevent such movement, but what is gold to them? It is an ideal and if the United States wants so intangible a thing let them have it. That is the idea.

Russia has half a billion dollars of gold and is coming forward to use it in exchange for merchandise. Its remote relation to the liabilities redeemable in it is such as to make this sum a trivality.

Great Britain is at the other extreme, maintaining a rather good reserve, but allowing the output of its great Welsh coal mines to come along this way almost without limit.

U. S. IN BETTER SHAPE.

It has been proposed that this indebtedness be remitted. Largely our people are opposed to the suggestion, but doubtless the course of events will take care of the whole business in due time and we shall be rid of the incubus of European troubles and start anew in life. The rise in grain and several other changes have placed this country in a much better position than it has heretofore held and it is up to us to make the most of it.

In the current discussion in Washington and elsewhere reports of foreign indebtedness there is more than a suggestion that the refunding plan is a means of letting the cancellation idea on to the public mind in a gentle way and of counting on future courses of commerce and financial views to dim the terms of contract and finally bury them in nothingness.

Anyhow there are many who say there is such a thing as injuring one's self by collecting a debt.

BUCKET SHOPS APPEALED TO WOMEN

Fake Brokers Fitted Out Offices to Attract Wealthy, Poor Also Swindled

By Universal Service.

New York, Feb. 22.—Women in all walks of life, unsophisticated in the ways of high finance, lost more than one-third of the $6,000,000,000 stolen from American investors by bucket shops and fake stock brokers during the past four years.

Widows, hard working scrub women, wealthy society women, high salaried actresses—all walked willingly into the painted mires of the bucket shop ring.

The thrill of gambling in stock market securities in the privacy of luxuriously furnished quotation board rooms was lure held out to the fair investors of wealth.

Several of the big bucket shops that have been forced to the wall during the past few months specialized in handling the accounts of those women who could afford to lose.

POOR WOMEN ROBBED.

But the thousands of pitiful cases reported to District Attorney Joab Banton, supervising the investigation by two grand juries of the bucket shop activities, has divulged another class of victims, a class that could not afford to lose a dollar, and the number of women in this class, who have sacrificed all they placed in the hands of the bucketeers, runs into many thousands.

There are stories of bucket shops that actually went so far as to fit out special offices for women, with lounge and smoking rooms and all the other luxuries demanded by the fair sex. The woman's branch of a bucket shop in the heart of Fifth avenue shopping district was long well known to social leaders of New York.

Mrs. Sadie Welch, wife of Joe Welch, noted comedian, was the first to divulge the methods of society bucketeers. She has told the district attorney how she would like to recover the thousands of dollars she lost.

ACTIVITIES COUNTRY-WIDE.

New York women were not the only victims of the bucketeers. From every section of the United States women have sent evidence of heavy losses due to operations of the bucket shop ring.

These operations have extended from Boston to Miami, from New York to Chicago, Denver, Seattle and down the Pacific Coast to San Francisco and Los Angeles. There is hardly a hamlet in all America that has not had its pockets picked by the many hands of the bucket shop ring.

Mail Your Order Immediately for Deep Mines Stock

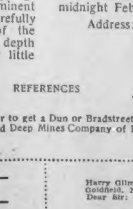
THOSE who take my advice and buy Deep Mines Stock at 12½ cents a share save 60 per cent. on the March 1 price. The directors have advanced the price from 12½ cents to 20 cents a share effective March 1, 1922. As soon as the "20 cent" allotment is sold, the price will jump to 35 cents a share. This prophecy is based on absolute knowledge of the conditions which surround the enterprise. I am as certain that the price of Deep Mines Stock will advance again and again as I am certain of anything in this world.

Don't get the idea that I am making extravagant statements without consideration! I am on the ground. I know all about the Goldfield Deep Mines Company. I am personally acquainted with the men in charge of its operations. I know how sensibly the finances are being used, and I know the district that's being mined. Let me explain:

Indications Are Good.

Conditions in the Goldfield Mines at the present time are similar to those of other famous mining camps such as immediately followed the prosperity occasioned by extracting high grade ore bodies from comparatively shallow depths. In these large mines the ores occur in shoots and deposits within the walls of the vein. Each individual ore shoot has its limitations, and often it is found, as depth is gained, impoverished zones from which no commercial ore can be recovered. In many such cases renewed effort has carried developments to a greater depth with the result of added production and dividends. Such instances of successful perseverance are numerous, notably at Butte, Mont.; Cripple Creek, Colo.; the Mother Lode and Grass Valley mines of California; Tonopah, Nev.; in Utah, Idaho, Arizona, South Africa, Peru and Australia.

The Deep Mines Company is sinking a three compartment 5x17 foot shaft to connect with the ore body below the 1400 feet. It is the intention to sink this shaft to a depth of 2400 feet. Already it has been driven more than 1150 feet.



The Company Has No Debts.

The Company has its machinery on the ground, in operations — all paid for. It owns over 600 acres of mineral lands in the heart of the Goldfield district that has produced more than $100,000,000.

In view of the fact that surface croppings can be traced for over a mile, and that eminent geologists and engineers, who have carefully examined the property, are positive of the existence of a vein system extending to a depth of at least 1400 feet, there seems but little doubt that the Deep Mines Company will shortly be in the most affluent circumstances imaginable.

Financier Backs Project.

The foregoing statements in themselves should impress you, but when I tell you that one of Nevada's most successful bankers—one of the largest individual stockholders in the Company—has given assurance that the shaft will be sunk to the depth of 2400 feet regardless of whether another share of stock is sold, you will understand why I have such faith in the enterprise, and why I am willing to go on record in recommending to you and my friends the purchase of this stock.

It is going to take a considerable sum to finish this work. But such strides have already been made, and such promising results already obtained, that without any hesitancy I say that at the present price Deep Mines Stock is an unalloyed bargain if there ever was one. Buy now — for unquestionably the price will be advanced shortly, just as it advanced from 12½ cents a share to 20 cents a share effective March 1, 1922.

There is not a moment to lose. If you want Deep Mines Stock at 12½ cents a share, wire your order and send your check to cover it by mail. The price positively goes to 20 cents a share March 1.

One hundred dollars will pay in full for 800 shares; one thousand dollars will pay in full for 8,000 shares—if the money is in the post office before midnight February 28th.

VOWS SHE'LL WED SON OF FORMER HUSBAND

Boy Saved Her Life, Says Maine Woman, Telling of Her Plans

Bangor, Me., Feb. 22.—Mrs. Georgiana Daigle, formerly Mrs. William Brooks, is determined to marry her divorced husband's son, Frederick Brown Brooks, in spite of all opposition. She so informed the Boston American correspondent today. Her brilliant black eyes flashed as she talked and she thumped her fists upon the sittingroom table, in her home on Hancock street.

On Monday, young Brooks, who is said to be only twenty years old, but claims to be twenty-one, applied to City Clerk Brett for a license to marry Mrs. Daigle, giving his age as twenty-one years, and here as thirty-six, incidentally mentioning that she was his step-mother.

This admission held up the license, for in Maine it is unlawful to marry one's stepmother, and the course of true love was made a lot rougher when Mrs. Brooks, a friend of the prospective groom and ex-husband of the blushing bride-to-be, appeared at City Hall with blood in his eye and forbade the issuance of the document.

Brooks, senior, declared that his son was only twenty years old and he claimed the youth was the victim of a cruel and designing female of forty-eight years."

BROOKS WEEPS.

The Boston American correspondent called upon Mrs. Daigle to get her side of the story. Young Brooks admitted the reporter, who found Mrs. Daigle working in the dining room. She gave vehement expression to her opinion of the elder Brooks.

"I married that man two years ago," she said, "and managed to live with him six years. Then I got a divorce. He is a pretty good carpenter, but the laziest man in the world.

"He never worked over three months in the year. I always had to work like a slave or else go ragged and hungry. Go to church? He went in Bangor where I have worked and they'll tell you I am all right.

BOY SAVED HER LIFE.

"After we separated, I saw little or nothing of Brooks for four years until the other day he showed up and butted into this thing I am going to never give upon this young man. I am going to marry until about three months ago. Then he called at my home here, found me nearly dead with pneumonia and sent for a doctor and medicine and pulled me through. He saved my life—and he paid the rent and other bills here all Winter.

"Am I going to marry him—you can bet on that. Old Bill Brooks would like to make up with me and have us for a grudge again, but he can't do it. He says I'm forty-eight; does Do I look it? Say, I'm as sound any gray hairs here?"—she loosened a great mop of raven hair—"not a one, sir. I was first married to John Daigle when I was fourteen. My own boy was born within a year. He is now twenty. That makes me between thirty-four and thirty-five.

FOUGHT IN FRANCE.

"You're going to marry this young man who saved my life in spite of all the foolish laws and butters-in they can dig up. If not here, then somewhere else. I've seen a lawyer and he says that when I got my divorce from Bill Brooks I was no longer stepmother of his son.

"I resumed my first husband's name, Daigle, when I divorced Brooks. Now I am to be Mrs. Brooks again, but not Mrs. Bill Brooks."

Meanwhile Brooks, who stands over six feet and looks about eighteen years old, ate apples and nodded approval of Mrs. Daigle's remarks. He is an ex-service man, having been in a Canadian regiment that saw three years' service in France.

MEXICANS PACIFY REBELS IN 2 STATES

By International News Service.

Mexico City, Feb. 22.—The Mexican states of Michoacan and Jalisco, formerly regarded as hotbeds of revolt, have been pacified, according to a report made to the federal government today by General Enrique Estrada, who said all rebel bands had been dispersed. In Jalisco the rebels sacked the town of Sayula, seizing 2,000 pesos. They fled into the mountains. This band was said to have been led by Francisco Valdez.

Unemployment, caused by high taxes, was said to have been one of the basic causes of discontent in Jalisco. The war office reports that rebel activities have been put down on the Isthmus of Tehuantepec and in the Laguna region of Chihuahua.

LANDLORD FINED FOR NOT PROVIDING HEAT

New York, Feb. 22.—After a tenant of a two-story dwelling at No. 1056 Lexington avenue, testified that he had seen only one bucket of coal in the cellar, the magistrate, Henry Ostertag, fined Thomas Fitzgerald, secretary and treasurer of the Mukien Holding Company, owners of the building, who found guilty of failure to provide sufficient heat and fined $250 by Magistrate Fetherston in Municipal Term Court.

MAN OF 60 A SUICIDE IN GREENWICH VILLAGE

New York, Feb. 22.—The body of a man about sixty years old, apparently an artist, was found on the sidewalk of Washington Mews, Greenwich village, today, by the police. A revolver was in the man's right hand and a bullet into the mouth had caused death. Every identification mark on his clothing had been ripped out.

ALL INVITED TO JOIN IN TITLES TEST

$5,000 to Be Divided Among 219 Successful Readers of Boston American

By THE TEST EDITOR.

This is your invitation, wherever you live in New England or Canada, to take part in the Boston American's $5,000 Famous Titles Test, which begins in these columns on Wednesday of next week and will continue for sixty week-days.

The Famous Titles Test will consist of sixty drawings, each intended to illustrate a Famous Title. Participants in the Test will be asked to name the Correct Titles. The 219 who are most successful will divide $5,000.

To the reader who, at the close of the Famous Titles Test, sends in the largest number of Correct Titles, the Boston American will pay $1,000 in cash.

There will be a second award of $750, a third of $500, a fourth of $400, a fifth of $300.

FIND RIGHT TITLE.

Every day throughout the Test a List of Titles will be printed. In this list will be the Correct Title, the title selected before the picture was drawn. Find that title, and repeat the performance often enough, and the First Award of $1,000 is yours.

Every reader who took part in the recent Book Test, and who plans to take part in the Test Famous Titles Test, is requested (not required), to send in the name of at least one New Contestant. Please send these names in before next Wednesday. If you are not among the active contestants for the $5,000 offered in the Membership Competition, please do as well and send in the names of New Contestants today.

The Test Editor has no means of knowing what will happen in the $5,000 Membership Competition are doing. Theirs, with all respect to the revenue officers, is a still hunt. They are not telling anybody. Least of all their competitors. Estimating the probable high scores in the Membership Test would be more guesswork. Whatever the high score, the man driving who makes it will be paid $1,000. And there are 218 other awards! All in cash! Simply for introducing your acquaintances to a sixty nights' entertainment.

MUST ALL GO THROUGH.

Please see that your friends clearly understand that their membership in the Famous Title Test will not count to your credit unless they go all the way through and at the close of the Test submit such a set of answers. If they do not follow this course they may as well not enter the Test, so far as your Membership score is concerned.

With only 5,000 Book Test parcels remaining to be checked the high score remains at 55. Early next week the Test Editor expects to announce the names of the nine Book Testers who are to take down the principal awards. They will be the same as those of the new Famous Titles Test; namely $1,000, $750, $500, $400, $300, $250, $150, $100 and $50. The Test Editor would like no better fun than calling upon the nine to help him in each of these plums. If he had his way he would leave the top one at every door. If only he could be on hand with an income of $5,000,000 a year!

TESTS WORTH WHILE.

Title Test Editor—I think three people who have been to see me are going to begin taking the Boston American now because I have told them that everyone needs it, from my point of view, and one or two will try the Famous Titles Test beginning March 1. Certainly I shall do so and I mean to be much more careful than I was in the Book Test.

Those Tests would be worth while even if no cash prizes were offered. I think they help all of us.—Yours truly, Helen E. Hall, to our books. I have no complaint to make, although I have read a few complaints.

This letter is only to say that, regardless of prizes, I always am trying to induce my friends to take the Boston American for their own good. I am writing not only to continue myself, but to endeavor to bring other readers. So many forget that the newspaper is printed for the many, and not for the few! Thank you, and wishing you and the paper every success.

Bradford. F.

Thank you.

Mr. Test Editor:

I wish to register a protest on the picture. The Correct Title of which has been printed as "Frank and Fearless."

First, I will admit that Clovis was the first thing of the Franks and that he was fearless. Also, I will admit that the armed knight on horseback was a King of France because of the royal emblem of fleur-de-lis shield, the fleur-de-lis.

But—and I now will quote from the Encyclopedia Britannica:

"Clovis (466-511)."

"Fleur-de-lis. First definitely connected with the French monarchy in an ordonnance of Louis le Jeune in 1179. First figured on a seal of Philip Augustus, in 1190."

E. B. H.

West Newton.

Your "admission" that Clovis was both FRANK AND FEARLESS would appear to cover the ground. Put yourself in the place of the artist for a moment. (Remember that he does not forget that his drawing is to be used in a $5,000 competition, which might cost much more). Suggest, if you will, some other name which he could make use of the name of Clovis in a "Frank and Fearless" picture to be used for Contest purposes. Would you have each of sixty pictures tell its title at each one of sixty contestant? Would it be your aim to have 2,000 scores of sixty Correct Titles in this picture—the name of Clovis was the important, the significant thing. Any other title would be open to the very serious objection. "But why the name of Clovis?"

F. E. L. ON NO. 46.

Dear Mr. Editor:

Just a moment of your time to tell you I am glad to know what was in the man's right hand and a bullet into the mouth had caused death. Every identification mark on his clothing had been ripped out.

ANNUAL DINNER OF FERDINAND EMPLOYES

Amateur Entertainers Score Hits in Minstrel Show Given at Store Gathering

The annual dinner, entertainment and dance of the employes of Frank Ferdinand, Inc., was held in the spacious carpet hall of the large store. More than seven hundred employes, headed by Mr. Ferdinand, sat down to a turkey dinner with all the fixings, after which a very fine and highly entertaining minstrel show was enjoyed. The show was headed by Jack Heath, who acted as interlocutor. He kept the end men busy telling funny stories and jokes on the different employes. The ends, Arthur Neary, Tom Davis, Mildred Stancar and Alice Stanley, kept the large crowd happy.

Other features were a song and dance by Madeline Davis and Mabel Block. A quartet composed of Harold Clapp, William Clapp, Leo Tucker and Mr. Smithson gave a fine program. Leo Tucker and Mr. Smithson gave solos. Tom Davis and Mabel Block did a Hoyden and Bones act that was a scream. Arthur Henry as Dapper Dan went big.

Miss Viola O'Donnell sang several songs. Jack Tucker gave a very fine exhibition of step dancing. The O'Donnell trio did themselves proud, as did Ernest McDonald in Irish songs and stories, also Paul Tarpley in a Hula-Hula song and dance. Dorothy Neary gave a fine exhibition of ballet dancing, and Dorothy Reddish as "Nobody's Baby" was a hit.

Great credit for the success of the evening must be given to Alice Murphy, musical director of the show. Her untiring efforts during rehearsals and week at the piano was greatly appreciated by her associates as well as by the audience. The committee of arrangements consisted of Miss L. Hickey, Viola O'Donnell, Harold Clapp, Alice Murphy and Arthur Neary.

particular picture every chance I could get and, using all my imagination, came no nearer at the end than I was when I started. If I have No. 54 right I shall think I am one jump ahead of my friends thought me a "hopeless case" when I called it week. I did. The drawing named correctly by the smallest number of all. Hundreds of participants wrote to the Test Editor weeks ago asking "just what the artist meant to represent" by No. 46. All received the same reply, that to answer that question frankly would be to lead them straight to the Correct Title.

COMPLAINT FROM EVERETT.

Test Editor:

At this late hour I wish to register a complaint on the title "Between the Lights." I am not a bird that finds fault every time I slip, for I have slipped and fallen before and have come the nearest to correct Title consideration I have found room for doubt and have accepted the printed title as correct. Inasmuch as Ulysses was the name of the person shown in the picture, as well as Samson, suppose we consider the name of the dog that is pictured between the lights. For your own information or education will say, Mr. Editor, please consult Webster on the meaning of John-a-Dreams. If this bird calling upon his wife and a home he certainly is too lazy to seek it at that hour of the night. Again, if he is a bird with such a "home" the place where he sits, John-a-Dreams is the last place in the world he might his pipe or take it from his mouth. Your only argument is that "Between the Lights" is the title the artist was supposed to picture.

I'll say, and I am sure the majority will agree, that the artist is a dumbell and ought a big bone this Winter. I suggest that the majority rule and that a voting slip be printed in an early edition and let 30,000 contestants decide which title fits the picture best after 30,000 votes for the definition of John-a-Dreams in Webster's.

F. K.

Everett.

Strange as it may seem, the Test Editor knew all about "Between the Lights" and purposely placed that title in the List of Titles as one that "might appear to fit" the picture.

Because you cannot "prove" John-a-Dreams. John-a-Dreams, as Webster says, is the nickname applied to "a dreamy, idle fellow."

What authority have we for calling the man in the picture an "idle fellow"? He may be the boss of a night gang a short distance away, who has come here for a smoke after his midnight supper. He may be a prosperous contractor, who has come out here after a bit of a tiff at home. We do not KNOW that he is an idle fellow. We do know, beyond dispute, that he sits here "Between the Lights."

BRAIN DEVELOPERS.

Dear Test Editor:

I had 47 correct titles on my list out of the first 50, but for some reason or other I changed a few of them and therefore am out of the running.

I enjoyed the Test greatly, because of its educational value. These contests are brain developers.

In regards to your next Test I would like to see a few more questions and hope you may accept them.

2—Make ALL the pictures "stickers." Many of those in the Test to work. Easy pictures are of no advantage, although, as we have seen, a few fall down on them.

3—In publishing the Lists of Titles make sure that only one title can be picked, and that no other word will come under or before near title if this be possible.

H. T.

Cambridge.

Your recommendation will be passed along to the right people.

Dear Sir:

My knees are beginning to tremble and as I am a nervous man the doctors have advised me that the only possible cure is to place my case entirely in your hands. So, if you are a man with a man's heart, listen to my wee-dorings. I am only two wrong to date, with 49 and 50 for today's lesson:

THE CRATER was seen BY MOONLIGHT by a man who was so full of WOOD(D) that he couldn't stand on FOUR FEET, TWO FEET AND NO FEET. Nor could he see THE IDLERS, one of whom turned out to be THE CONQUEROR. The latter had a ticket for a play called THE CAR AND THE LADY. He left for the theatre at a time that was SLOW BUT SURE. I preferred THE ORIGINAL.

With two other slips that I know of, I make my tally 55. Not so bad, Old Top, eh? I am changing out a small storeroom to keep the $1,000 in when it comes and I'll all as well will land another in the Membership Competition.

Malden. L. A.

You name only nine titles; five of them are good. Yours, therefore, can be the 55 score which has been reported.

Tomorrow, a Test Drawing which "floored" thousands. No. 54.

If Washington Were Alive

We Would Not Have Japan and England Telling Us What the United States Might and Might Not Do.

Copyright—1922—By Star Company

The Senate will soon consider the so-called "Four-Power Treaty." Under that treaty the United States would cease to be an independent power and become the "me too" of other Powers, England and Japan.

Under that treaty the United States would guarantee the possessions of England and Japan in the Pacific, and at the same time the United States would meekly accept from Japan, with England's backing, the order NOT to fortify our own marvelous Far Eastern possessions, the Philippines and Guam.

This country had only a handful of citizens when Washington lived. It has 106,000,000 today, but it must have a cowardly breed of statesmen that lack, with one hundred and eight millions behind them, the courage Washington had when backed only by a thin settlement on the edge of the Atlantic.

Perhaps somewhere in the Senate there will develop enough caution, if not enough self respect, to think on what Washington would do before passing those treaties.

This being Washington's Birthday, however, you would probably rather read a little about him than a great deal about those running the country now.

He had sworn on his solemn oath to be loyal to King George.

He knew, and everbody knew, that for him to lift a finger against the King, or the laws of England, was to declare himself a traitor, worthy of a shameful death.

Yet this man, Englishman in blood, but American in spirit, rebelling against injustice, realizing that law ceases to be law when it violates the will of a majority, is the very man who defeated the armies of England, who humiliated King George, who made of this a free and independent nation in which his example will never be forgotten.

There are in the life of George Washington many admirable lessons, as numerous as the days in which he lived and worked.

The greatest lesson he teaches is that REAL MANHOOD consists in rebellion against tyranny, in disregard of that which is called "law" when it becomes injustice and is used by the few for the oppression of many.

It was the law, when Washington lived, that men struggling in this country should pay heavy taxes to England without representation.

And Washington was the man able to say: "I denounce and defy that law." And, what is more important, he was the man able to fight successfully.

Nearly all the features of human greatness entered into Washington's character.

He was so great a MAN that we have actually forgotten that he was a great soldier and a wonderful fighter.

We forget his battles, as we forget the battles of Cromwell, because, like Cromwell, he was a million times bigger than his biggest victory.

Cromwell is the only great commander who never lost a battle—yet hardly man thinks of him as a fighter, but rather as a law maker and ruler.

Washington is a man who lost many battles, and who was greater in defeat than Cromwell in victory—for it takes a higher greatness to endure defeat without discouragement than to follow one victory with another.

Washington was a patient soldier, a brave, untiring man, one whom discouragement, the desertion of friends, vile calumny, could not swerve from his duty.

But he was more than all that, he was one with a brain able to defy injustice and to defeat it.

We celebrate today the birth of a man who had a quality unfortunately lacking in the average citizen today.

Washington could not be frightened by words.

Washington could not be frightened by a judge sitting under the tower of Westminster, in the robes of a Duke or an Earl. And if he were alive today, he would not be frightened by a judge, sitting in black dress in his own nation, telling him that, in spite of injustice, he must submit, because it was the law. He would not fear a bought judge or an unjust judge.

This country is a nation independent and free, instead of being the colony of England—because, thanks to Washington and to the influence of freedom upon human beings, it is a country that bred men able to defy law when law meant injustice.

We suffer now under laws that mean injustice.

We permit the poor to carry the heavy load that should be borne by the rich in taxation.

We submit without representation to taxation by the Trusts—taxes far in excess of those which impelled Washington to defy and defeat England.

We need the spirit of which we are reminded in this 22nd day of February.

We need to remember that great rock of courage and manhood, that hero of ages, big in body, in spirit, and in courage—GEORGE WASHINGTON.

Against Drug Evil

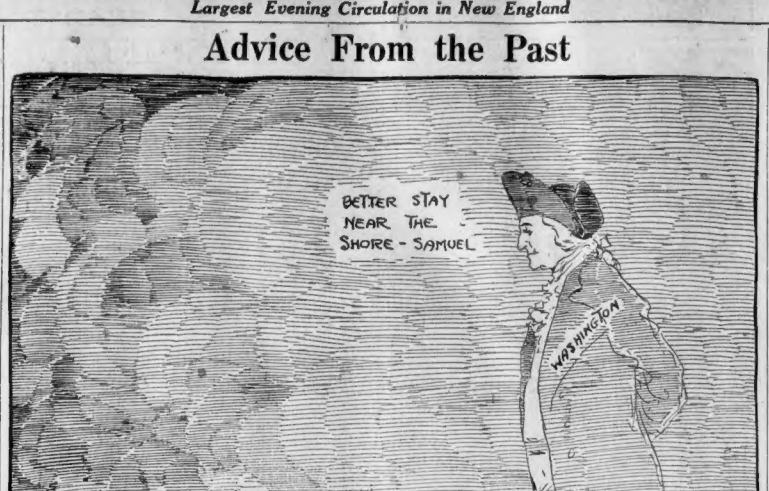
State Druggists Indorse Without Reservation Campaign of Hearst Newspapers to Suppress Use of Habit-Forming Drugs

The Boston American is pleased to inform its readers that the State organization of druggists has indorsed without reservation the campaign of the Hearst newspapers to suppress the alarming increase in the use of habit-forming drugs.

Our pleasure comes from the fact that with our large circulation we are able to inform so many people of the unselfish contribution made by the druggists to the abatement of an evil that undermines the public morals and health.

We assume that the average druggist looks upon the occasional vendor of drugs in his profession with the same contempt that the average physician has for the occasional member of his profession who resorts to unauthorized surgery. During the administration of Governor McCall, the Boston American conducted a successful campaign which made our Massachusetts anti-drug laws the best in the country. The druggists at that time joined wholeheartedly in the spirit of the campaign.

Advice From the Past



New Letters for Alphabet Urged

LONDON, Feb. 22.—Though English is now by far the most widely spoken language, and though the desire to learn it by foreigners of all kinds has enormously increased in consequence of the war, there are certain practical difficulties in the way of its becoming a real world-tongue. But for these difficulties the spread of our language would be much wider than it already is.

For one thing, we are too rich in vowel sounds. The average man imagines we have five "and sometimes w and y." We have really fifteen vowel sounds, against five for the Japanese and Spaniards and seven for the Italians.

Another difficulty is that our spelling does not show what sounds are used to pronounce words. The foreign student may learn to read English readily by his own efforts, but finds it next to impossible to talk to us unless he has had the services of a good teacher.

A possible way out of these difficulties has been given by Professor Daniel Jones, chief of the phonetics department of University College. He suggested that we adopt a mild system of spelling reform, and also add a few new letters to our alphabet. But he by no means expects to see these changes brought about—at any rate, not for years to come.

"The new letters we should need," said Professor Jones, "would be for the sounds sh, ng, and th, with possibly one or two new vowel letters. The word 'shrinking,' for instance, would then be written with seven letters instead of nine. In a word like 'ingredient' there would be no change."

These are perhaps subtleties of language which are likely to leave most of us lukewarm. In other ways Professor Jones' department is doing a great work in spreading the proper speaking of English throughout the world.

Eminent Astronomer and Authority on Subjects of Scientific Interest

HERE is a very singular question, and yet upon reflection it can see that it is a very natural one for a "layman" who knows nothing of astronomy, and that is about the condition in which the schools leave everybody except special students:

"How happens it that the moon's surface is not always so illuminated that we may observe its entire disk? An explanation that makes this problem clear to a layman will surely be appreciated.—D. B. M."

The changing phases of the moon, it is to be feared, will never be fully understood except by the elect. For others they appear to be an unsolved enigma.

Not Self-Luminous Body

The moon is not a self-luminous body any more than the earth is. We see a landscape by the reflected sunlight that comes from it. When that side of the earth where we happen to be has rolled over away from the sun, causing the latter to "set," the landscapes turn very dark or disappear entirely. And that is just what happens on the moon.

Only the sunlit or a part of the sunlit half of the moon is visible to us at any time, all the rest of her surface being in night, just as the surface of the earth is in night on the side turned from the sun.

Since the moon travels once a month around the earth, in an orbit that lies nearly in the same plane as that in which the earth goes around the sun, carrying the moon with it, it follows that the moon must sometimes be in that part of her orbit that is between the earth and the sun, and sometimes in that part which passes around the other side of the earth from the sun.

If you can't make a satisfactory mental picture of this, then draw a large circle on a sheet of paper, to represent the earth's orbit around the sun, (the sun being in the center), and then, putting a dot anywhere on its orbit to represent the position of the earth at any time, draw a small circle around that to represent the orbit of the moon.

Then you will plainly see that as the earth goes around the sun in the large circle, with the moon travelling around it in the small one, and making a dozen circuits to the earth's one, the moon must necessarily be sometimes between the sun and the earth and sometimes on the other side of the earth from the sun.

Moon, Like Earth, a Globe

When you have got that situation of affairs fixed in your mind's eye, remember that the moon is a globe, like the earth, only smaller, and is like the earth, too, in having no light of her own to shine by. Now, as this globe of the moon goes around the earth, and with the earth around the sun, it will, again like the earth, have one-half of its surface illuminated by the sun, viz., the half that at any time faces the sun, while the other half will be buried in night.

Remember, too, that we see the moon not as we see the earth, from its own surface, but as we would see the earth if, instead of being on it, we were situated out in space 240,000 miles away from it.

Suppose, then, that you look at the moon when it is in a position opposite to the sun. At such a time you see it as a round, full globe, because the side that you are looking at is the side that is also facing the sun.

Next, suppose that you look at the moon when it is in a direction at right angles to that of the sun. Then you will see it as a half globe, or half disk, because what you are looking at is the side of the moon which is half in the sunlight and half in night or darkness.

Finally, suppose that you look at the moon when it is almost in the same direction as the sun. Then you will see only a thin, crescent-shaped edge of the half of the moon's globe that is facing the sun, all the rest of its globe being visible in the darkness of its own night. When the moon gets between the earth and the sun, only its night side or invisible side is toward us, and if it gets exactly in line it will eclipse the sun.

First Notice of Old Age

VIENNA, Feb. 22.—When did you first notice that you were growing old?

The Neues Wiener Tagblatt put this question to its readers. Here are some of the replies from men:

When the presence of many people began to bore me.

When I found more pleasure in staying at home in the evening than in going out.

When I met my first sweetheart after many years.

When my daughter said to me, "Father, that is the old way of spelling."

When I noticed the first gray hairs.

When I was told, "You are looking so fresh and young."

When at a dance more attention was paid to my daughter than to myself.

When I began to notice that all declarations of love are similar.

When the old men ceased paying me compliments and the very young ones began.

When I received an invitation to a silver wedding from a couple whose first wedding I attended.

When I came to the conclusion that I had never been young.

SELFISHNESS IMPERILS MARRIED LIFE

By Winifred Black

(Copyright, 1922, by Newspaper Feature Service, Inc.)

YOUNG and good-looking, and well-dressed and happy—dear me, how happy they were—the bridal couple.

She had a brand-new handbag, and he had a brand-new suitcase. She had a lovely hat, and you couldn't have found fault with his traveling cap to save your life. And her wedding ring shone and the diamond engagement above it gleamed and sparkled. And they laughed and whispered together. And everybody liked them and almost everyone envied them.

Did Strange Thing

But when it came time to go to the dining car, they did a strange thing.

They were ahead of everybody to begin with—they seemed to be very hungry and they didn't want to miss a chance for seats in the crowded car.

So nobody blamed them when they got ahead of everyone else. But the doors between the cars were heavy and hard to open and the train was long, and after the second door the bridal couple stopped and waited, and fell behind, and two middle-aged women—no, one of them was quite elderly, yes, her hair was white—opened the doors themselves. And the bridal couple fell in behind and laughed to think how much trouble they saved themselves.

Whichever It Was—

"Oh!" said the elderly woman, throwing her entire weight against the door and pushing as hard as she could. "Dear me, how hard they are to open—these doors."

Then she happened to look behind and saw the bridal couple. And she and the middle-aged woman looked at each other and then started, and they ran through those cars like a couple of mischievous schoolgirls, breathless and laughing and—every time they slammed the door behind them, and the bridegroom had to open every one of them himself—after all.

And the other passengers saw the joke, and everybody laughed—even the bride and groom. To be quite honest about it, they laughed the hardest of all.

Which was it who suggested the plan to make somebody else open the doors for them—do you suppose?

The bride? Or the groom?

Whichever it was, I'm afraid I'm a little sorry for the other.

Look out, little bride—he was very quick to think of some way of saving himself a little trouble—that husband of yours! Be careful that some day you don't have to watch him to see that he isn't saving himself some trouble—at your expense.

No—it was the bride.

Sweet of her to think of saving her husband, wasn't it? She is a brand-new bride, and her eyes are all for him. But some day I wonder, if she won't be making funny little plans to save herself trouble, and perhaps Husband won't know a thing about it.

Every time I think of them I remember the story of the poor old man who lived with his daughter-in-law and didn't sit at the table to eat. He sat in a corner by himself and ate from a wooden bowl especially made for him. And one day the daughter-in-law saw her little son at work.

Don't Forget

"What are you doing?" she asked.

"I am making a bowl for you and father to eat from," said the little boy, "when you are old, like grandpa, and come to live with me and my wife."

And the most interesting part of it was that the little boy meant absolutely no harm in the world. He thought he was doing the perfectly proper, natural thing.

Don't forget the bowl, bridegroom!

ARE YOU HIDING YOURSELF?

If you have special ability along some line, do not wait for some one to "discover" you, for you may never be "discovered."

If you have special talents and unusual ability and it does not become known, of what benefit is it to you?

You may be in a mental position because you have not demonstrated to any one what you can do.

It is not enough that you work hard in your present job.

If you have that within you which seeks expression or, being expressed would put you in a far better place than you now occupy, it is your fault if you do not make it known and show what you can do.

As long as you are satisfied where you are none will offer you better.

Why should they if you never indicate that you are trying for a higher position.

ARISTOCRACY OF SPIRIT IS BEST OF ALL

By Dr. Charles Fleischer

A QUAKER college is hardly the place that you would naturally couple with blasphemy.

But, by unescapable association of ideas, the writer connects with a peaceful place of learning near Philadelphia a certain familiar and somewhat blasphemous suggestion.

He was personally conducted through the college by the dignified president of the institution and was being shown a typical student's room, when his eye caught a card with this inscription:

"Live so that you can look everyone in the face and tell them all to go to ——." Or something to that effect.

We looked at each other and laughed. The president with mock-shockedness assured his visitor that the college did not teach precisely that. But the unshocked visitor opined that it was not half-bad doctrine.

Nor is it—if you do not make this the final word on the subject. If you have to choose between an attitude of chivalrous indifference and the too common spirit of fearful concern, there can be no doubt that even defiance would be better than timorous timidity.

But there is no need to choose either extreme. As in most of the ways of life, so herein also the golden mean is not merely the path of prudence, but it represents wisdom and just appreciations.

Helpful Hint

We have not yet generally accepted the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States as our American biblical literature, but we would do well to begin to look to them for more than political guarantees and guidance.

For instance, in connection with our theme, we may find a decidedly helpful hint in the famous Fourth of July pronouncement, "When in the course of human events, etc., etc."

And then the immortal document proceeds to the admission that "A decent respect to the opinions of mankind" requires that the rebelling colonists should set forth the causes which justified their assumption of a separate and equal station among the nations of the earth.

Apply that idea to this matter of personal attitude, and you have a shining contribution straight from the pen and brain of Thomas Jefferson, teaching you to combine independence with justification, a virile self-assertion with a proper regard for appearances and opinions.

As a good American, the young Swarthmore student referred to above doubtless found the injunction, put so colloquially on that placard, to be sound Jeffersonian democracy.

Evidently, it appealed to him as a personal call to be a living, walking embodiment of the Declaration of Independence, which each of us should be!

You see, it was not sufficient for our Revolutionary Fathers to cut off relations with the Mother Country; but they had to be ready to set forth the reasons which caused them to dissolve the political bands which had united them with England; and then they had to fight in order to establish their separate position.

The person who, or who thinks, according to the conventions BECAUSE HE IS ACTUALLY AFRAID TO BE OR TO DO OTHERWISE, does not present a very pleasing picture. Rather he suggests the little field-mouse, turned up by Robert Burns while ploughing—a wee, cowering, timorous beastie with a panic in his breastie.

Should Have Courage

If you care and dare to be different, you should have the courage of your uniqueness. You should stand up for your opinions in right manly fashion, indifferent to adverse criticism or costly results.

Make sure, however, that your divergent ideas and your unusual practices are honestly held and maintained, and worthy also of the sacrifices which you may be called upon to bring.

There is never much sense in bringing your offerings to false gods.

If you are going to be self-insistent, you would do well to make sure that you are so jolly right as to make your self-insistence worth while.

In that case you may serenely follow Emerson's advice: Always scorn appearances and you always may!

If, however, you follow the devil's leading of self-indulgence, or even the impulse of vanity or whim, then you would better beware of—yourself and consequences.

Though indifference to appearances and to the opinion of others is better than a fearful concern, yet best of all is that virile aristocracy of spirit and of conduct which always makes a majority of You and God.
